The IMF programme which was suspended in January cannot be resumed unless the issue of circular debt is settled according to the wishes of the lender by increasing power tariff to unsustainable levels which is being resisted by the government. He said that presently many old and inefficient power stations are being operated in the country adding to the debt, power production is more than consumption while government is bound to pay for it, heavy capacity charges are hitting power sector while the faulty transmission system is unable to transmit power generated by the power plants.

SHC stays execution of Baldia factory fire case convicts

DNA

KARACHI: Sindh High Court (SHC) on Monday admitted for hearing appeals of five convicts challenging their sentences in the Baldia factory fire case. According to details, SHC has sought the complete record of the case from the Anti-Terrorism Court (ATC) that handed down the September 22 verdict sentencing Zubair Chariya and Abdul Rehman to death for their role in the deaths of over 260 people in the 2012 Baldia factory fire. Earlier, the two MQM workers along with other convicts approached the Sindh High Court (SHC) to challenge their conviction in the high-profile Baldia factory fire case. The appeal argued that the ATC ignored important evidence while pronouncing its verdict. They have asked the high court to overturn the ATC's verdict. Lawyers of factory workers who were handed over prison time argued that police declared their clients innocent in its investigation and no witnesses record statements against watchmen Fazal Muhammad and Ali Muhammad. Earlier, on September 22, anti-terrorism court in its verdict in the high-profile Baldia factory fire case sentenced Rehman Bhola and Zubair Chariya to death.

PMC decision to hold MDCAT this year perplexes students

PMC President Dr Arshad Taqi said that students' anxiety was natural, as it is difficult to digest change. He said students should not worry, adding there would not be any complications with the MDCAT and the council was determined to address issues

DNA

ISLAMABAD: The Pakistan Medical Commission's (PMC) decision to hold a single medical and dental colleges admissions test (MDCAT) across the country has put students in limbo, as the PMC Act states that the commission will hold the national MDCAT in 2021. Students have asked why the PMC is planning to hold the MDCAT in violation of its act, which also states that the test will be held according to recommendations by an academic board that has yet to be established. A faculty member has also asked how the PMC, which has directed colleges to propose their annual fees by Oct 20, will assess the infrastructure, faculty, facilities and quality of education of 172 colleges in a week – the length of time that the PMC will take to approve the fees. PMC President Dr Arshad Taqi said that students' anxiety was natural, as it is difficult to digest change. He said students should not worry, adding there would not be any complications with the MDCAT and the council was determined to address issues.

A few days ago, students from the Rawalpindi Medical University met with Special Assistant to the Prime Minister on National Health Services Dr Faisal Sultan and asked why students were not being given an appropriate amount of time before the introduction of the MDCAT and the National Licensing Exam (NLE). They argued that the United Kingdom decided to introduce the UK Medical Licensing Examination in 2015, but it will not be implemented until 2023. They also said that if the MDCAT is being introduced in 2020, the NLE – an exit exam – should be held in 2025 for the same batch that will sit for the MDCAT this year. They said that with separate pre-medical curriculums across Pakistan, it was impossible for all students to appear in a single MDCAT. Dr Sultan told the students that the decision to form the PMC and introduce the MDCAT was made in students' best interest and would ensure education quality. A faculty member at a medical college who asked to remain anonymous said there was no precedent across the world for an immediate implementation of policies. He said: "The USMLE was announced in 1980s and was implemented in 1990s. Same was the case in UK. In Pakistan, it is clearly mentioned in the PMC Act that the MDCAT will be held in 2021 but the PMC has announced it in year 2020. Moreover, it is mentioned in section 13 of Act that the academic board, which is yet to be established, will set the standard of MDCAT but test has been announced." On its website, the PMC has directed medical and dental colleges to propose their annual fees by Oct 20, which the commission will then take seven days to approve after an evaluation. "It is impossible to evaluate as many as 172 colleges within seven days. It seems that the fees will be decided through negotiations and students will have to pay the exorbitant fees," he said.

Halal market fastest growing segment of trade
Presence of Trillion-Dollar Halal Food Market Being the largest segment in the halal industry; the increasing demand for halal food is evident with total spending of $ 1.13 trillion on halal Food and Beverages

DNA

The global halal market is the emerging and fastest-growing consumer segment of the international trade which is estimated at $ 3 trillion at present, growing from $635 billion in 2010, and is forecast to reach $ 3.2 trillion by 2023. According to the Organization of Islamic Countries (OIC), the overall spending on the halal sector in the world remained at about $3.15 trillion in 2014 (as per latest available figures) representing 2.6% market share of total spending in the world. The industry is largely dominated by the consumer items ranging from processed foods and beverages to the pharmaceuticals, fashion and cosmetics. Among halal goods, halal food has grabbed the largest market share of about 36% in the overall halal industry, reflecting its upward trend in the world. Presence of Trillion-Dollar Halal Food Market Being the largest segment in the halal industry; the increasing demand for halal food is evident with total spending of $ 1.13 trillion on halal Food and Beverages (F&B) out of global spending of $ 6.75 trillion on the Food and Beverages during 2014; representing its market share of 16.7%. The Muslims are expected to make around 26% of the world's population by 2020, thus their spending on halal F&B is projected to be at $ 1.59 trillion occupying 16.9% of the market share. The augmented demand for halal food has made it a lucrative business activity to invest and earn profits. Livestock experts believe that Pakistan can earn Rs50 billion foreign exchange annually by exporting halal meat and Rs40 billion by exporting sacrificial animals on Hajj. The overall volume of exports of halal meat is more than $3 billion and Pakistan has nearly six per cent share in it. To take advantage of such a big potential market, Pakistan needs to mobilize all the institutions working for trade and export development to focus on those markets which have large population and higher meat consumption rates to enhance halal meat exports from Pakistan. China, Turkey, Malaysia, Indonesia, Central Asian States and other such countries which have a large population and considered as heavy importers of meat and meat products from around the world should be targeted instead of targeting only Arab countries. For these purposes, commercial officers posted in the above-mentioned countries must be given annual targets of growing exports while meat exporters and processors should be supported to participate in business exhibitions and fairs. Pakistan as an Islamic country has all the potential to become a leader in this sector with special emphasis on Halal and processed meat. Nevertheless, despite all these facts, meat exporters of Pakistan are facing furious competition from their counterparts like India, Brazil and Africa. Governmental support for meat export sector is scarce, even the procedures to handle meat exports are troublesome. The government should pay attention to these hiccups besides arranging repatriation of money of livestock exporters stuck abroad due to the default of certain buyers. To make room in the trillions of dollars halal products market, practice of allocating Live Animal Export Special Quotas should be abolished and only value-added products of livestock should be allowed to export.

Int'l Day of Rural Women being marked

ISLAMABAD: Like other parts of the globe, International Day of Rural Women is being marked today on October 15 across the globe including Pakistan to honor the role of rural women. Women and girls are disadvantaged in this pandemic, a problem aggravated in rural areas. Rural women already face specific previous struggles in their daily lives. Now, since COVID-19 and their unique health needs in remote areas, they are less likely to have access to quality health services, essential medicines, and vaccines. We need to advocate for sufficient services (water, health, electricity, etc.) to support women's productive and unpaid care and domestic work, which is exacerbated by the crisis. At the same time, paid work has an even wider gender wage gap and disadvantages than in urban areas. — APP

Renewable Energy (RE) policy had already been approved with the consultation of all stakeholders. Sindh and Balochistan would be major beneficiaries as many solar and wind projects would be set up in these provinces, they said. Capital 'Panahgahs' to be transformed

ISLAMABAD: Pakistan Bait-ul-Mal (PBM) is striving to transform all the five shelter homes (Panahgah) of federal capital into model facilities by the month-end, said its spokesman on Monday. "The PBM has taken the charge of five 'Panahgahs' and vigorously implementing its rehabilitation and remodeling plan by following the instruction of Prime Minister Imran Khan," the PBM spokesman told APP. The prime minister has recently handed over the administrative control of five 'Panahgahs' of Islamabad to the PBM for providing safe, secure and conducive environment to the daily wage earners through its upgradation at par with one-star hotel. Currently, 'Panahgahs' are operational in five areas of Islamabad including Peshawer Morr, Sabzi Mandi (Sector I-11), Tariqi and Bara Kahu. He said an integrated system was being installed in all the shelter homes to provide food, stay and proper hygiene to the 'Panahgah' dwellers under one umbrella. Close-Circuit Television (CCTV) Cameras would be installed to ensure safe and secure environment at the facilities.

Islamabad's needs

THE government has decided to spend 54 billion rupees to beautify Islamabad. Renovating the federal territory is a good idea. However, Islamabad is already beautiful. While this is a worthwhile venture, Islamabad needs improvement in its infrastructure as well. The Capital Development Authority (CDA) must pay attention to the overall condition of the deteriorating public services of the city. For the last four years or so, Islamabad has seen little to no development. No major repair or maintenance services have been carried out during this time even though the city is Pakistan's capital.

The CDA has indeed ensured that the city master plan is adhered to so that issues related to urbanisations do not aggravate. However, there are still some infrastructural developments to be made. For instance, the roads across the city demand significant repairs. One has to look no further than one of its main arteries, the Islamabad Expressway, which turns into a bottleneck when approaching close to Rawalpindi. Last time the roads were repaired was almost four years ago. Even after spending one billion rupees, the condition of the roads did not improve.

Similarly, the sewerage and drainage system of the city must be taken care of. The system is under stress due to rapid urbanisation. Therefore, the officials should consider its remodelling according to present-day requirements. Another issue that the residents of the city face is the distribution of water. The water distribution system in the federal capital is deteriorating with every passing day. The overhauling of the city's sanitation system must be prioritised so that people get water for their daily consumption. Islamabad must not be allowed to get to the level of Karachi, where tanker vehicles are the only source of usable water for many citizens. It would be wise if the CDA utilise these funds in such a manner that promotes sustainable development instead of cosmetic beautification of the city.

Mental health and Pakistan

MUHAMMAD OMAR IFTIKHAR

THE human mind is a mysterious organ. While it controls the body and helps in cognitive pursuits, it must be taken care of. Recently, the youth of Pakistan and those belonging to the 35 to 45 age bracket have been experiencing depression. This is caused by several factors. The sense of belonging and to be loved, overprotective parenting, excessive expectations are to name a few. Unfortunately, mental health problems are not taken seriously in Pakistan. The advice that people receive includes getting married, going on a vacation, or in some cases, "not thinking about it." This attitude needs to be changed.

If someone is facing a mental health problem, it must be addressed. Such problems include depression, suicidal thoughts, obsessive-compulsive disorder, paranoia, etc. People in our society consider a person having a mental health issue to be a gone case. They are sent to the psychiatrist and the society does not stop making fun of them. They must be advised to see a psychologist. Where a psychiatrist uses medicine to treat a problem, psychologists use talk therapy and have a conversation with the person to share whatever is on their mind. This proves helpful in many ways. The person may not be able to share innate thoughts with anyone and once they do it with the psychologist, proper remedies can be suggested that do not involve taking medication. In Pakistan, resident psychologists are needed in corporations to guide professionals when they are facing depression. Such psychologists are also needed in schools, colleges, and universities. Students do study under immense pressure to earn grades. Their parents' expectations turn them into robots who rote learn subjects and a grade lesser than their parents' expectations results in scolding and beating. Mental health issues are to be taken seriously and special steps must be developed to ease such problems.

Fighting for Palestine

Mark Muhannad Ayyash

For imperial allies led by the UK and then the US, the Israeli settler-colonial state, and Arab states that largely have been quick to acquiesce and serve imperial interests, Palestine has always been posed as a "problem" which must be dissolved. If only those who render Palestine a "problem" would have the courage, they would ask Palestinians what they really intend to ask: how does it feel to have the world wish that it did not have to deal with you? How does it feel to be entirely unwanted, unheard? How does it feel to be entirely instrumental for others in your very being and non-being?

IN the last few years, Israel has further cemented its grip on Palestine. The list of Palestinian losses is depressing: the marked movement towards international recognition of Jerusalem as the undivided capital of Israel, official annexation of Palestinian land, an increase in the number of settlers and the development of settlements on Palestinian lands, the horrific besiegement of Gaza and the world's participation in the siege, the "de-development" of the Palestinian economy, uninhibited killing and maiming of Palestinians, suffocating restrictions on movement, gender-based violence in prisons and at checkpoints, continued demolitions of Palestinian homes, the stifling of Palestinian activism and speech for Palestinian rights in Western Europe and North America, and the rising tide of diplomatic normalcy between Israel and Arab states.

Add to the mix common social issues like patriarchal oppression, interpersonal conflict, crime, socioeconomic inequality, family feuds, and political corruption, combined with a lacklustre and largely handcuffed leadership, and you begin to get a picture of how remarkable Palestinian resistance really is. That Palestinians do not give up is precisely what is so historic and inspiring about their resistance. For more than 100 years, the Palestinian people have been resisting and fighting for Palestine, holding on to what they have left of it, clinging on to the hope of one day reclaiming what they have lost. Attention is often given to the armed resistance, but far more numerous, diverse, and long-standing is the unarmed Palestinian resistance. Labour strikes, boycotts, legal actions, political and community organising, demonstrations, marches, hunger strikes, passing the keys of demolished homes from one generation to the next, the formation of Palestinian societies and cultural groups in exile and refugee camps, lobbying politicians across the world, building creative local and sustainable economies, and everyday acts of resistance are all peppered throughout the history of the struggle. Resistance also comes in the form of cultural productions that narrate and communicate the suffering of Palestinians; intellectual and academic studies that illuminate the history and lived realities of Palestinians; the development of political manifestoes and ideologies that pave a path forward towards freedom and liberation. The Emirati and Bahraini political elites, for example, never register these lives when they proclaim their so-called peace deals with Israel. Many Palestinians, as well as common Bahrainis and Emiratis who have no say in the policies adopted by their rulers, have rightly labelled these agreements a betrayal of the Palestinian people and the Palestinian cause. Palestine is entirely absent from these "peace in the Middle East deals" not just in terms of Palestinian officials being excluded from negotiations and agreements, but in the real tangible sense of erasing Palestinian lands, rights, freedoms, and lives from the geopolitical landscape and political grammar. These deals seek to constitute a new status quo in which it becomes normal to accept that Palestine does not exist and therefore deserves, or even has itself earned, its erasure.

We do not need to imagine how this normalisation of erasure would operate in the mainstream discourse of Western European and North American media. It has been happening for many years. For a recent example, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation (CBC) despicably apologised for using the term Palestine on air just one day after one of its hosts dared to pronounce this apparently forbidden and offensive word.

The "problem" of Palestine One of the mechanisms in which Palestine is erased in the two examples above is the casting of the question of Palestine as a "problem" in the sense of a nuisance to the peace and tranquillity of the world order, since Palestine does not fit the conventional categories through which the world order is made legible.

Thus, the very same categories that emerged in the colonial era in order to dispossess and/or rule over Indigenous peoples across the world, such as laws of property ownership, statehood, and sovereignty, are presented in the contemporary world as "natural" categories that simply describe how the world is "naturally" organised. In The Souls of Black Folk, published in 1903, WEB DuBois explored what it means to be continuously asked, directly and indirectly, "How does it feel to be a problem?" This question, which continues to be asked of Black Americans, reveals nothing about the struggles, aspirations, and lived realities of Black lives in America. Rather it tells us much more about the power structures in which Black Americans come to be constructed as a "problem". The question, in short, never probes the questioner's own role in rendering Black life as a "problem", or in creating the social, economic, cultural, and political conditions that oppress and suppress Black life. Similarly, Palestinians are cast as a "problem" in the international arena, shifting the burden of becoming unproblematic on the subject that has been produced as a "problem" – an impossible task whose sole purpose is really the eradication and erasure of the subject that has been constituted as a "problem".

For imperial allies led by the United Kingdom and then the United States, the Israeli settler-colonial state, and Arab states that largely have been quick to acquiesce and serve imperial interests, Palestine has always been posed as a "problem" which must be dissolved. If only those who render Palestine a "problem" would have the courage, they would ask Palestinians what they really intend to ask: how does it feel to have the world wish that it did not have to deal with you? How does it feel to be entirely unwanted, unheard? How does it feel to be entirely instrumental for others in your very being and non-being?

These are precisely the kinds of rhetorical questions that the Gulf ruling elites are asking of Palestinians today. Palestine has seen its fair share of allies who appear to stand with Palestinians, only to move on and leave it behind. It is this sense of being left behind that haunts and seems to follow Palestinian resistance that I want to underscore. That in addition to facing all of those immense difficulties of erasure perpetrated by settler-colonial and imperial powers, of which the CBC and Canada are a part, there is also a more hurtful kind of erasure that can take place in the space where Palestinians join hands with others from the "Global South" seeking collective liberation.

If I repeat the term Palestine too much in this piece, it is because it needs to be affirmed and reaffirmed, continuously, forcefully, and vociferously. The effort to erase Palestine, of which the CBC and the UAE/Bahraini ruling class are but a small part, is not going away but is in fact gaining momentum. Whether the CBC or the Emirati and Bahraini authoritarian rulers are intentionally erasing Palestine is really irrelevant, what matters is the effect of their discourse, actions, and policies, which is the erasure of Palestine – a project that has reached an advanced stage.

In this sense, yes Palestine is so far a losing cause. It will likely continue to be a losing cause for the foreseeable future. But make no mistake, Palestine is not a lost cause. So long as the injustice continues unabated, Palestinians will fight for Palestine. And even if freedom remains beyond reach, Palestinians in Palestine and beyond will at least show the world that the violence of this settler-colonial, neocolonial, and post-colonial world order will never defeat the spirits of those who are being crushed at the bottom of this order.

Yes, in fighting, Palestine will be a nuisance, but in the sense of always reminding the powerful that they are not the "forces of the good" that the world order is neither orderly nor just. To register and release into the mainstream discourse, the essence of Palestinian actions of resistance is to realise that when Palestine does not fit into dominant categories, this is not because of a shortcoming of Palestine, it is because of the violent and oppressive purpose of those categories.

To register Palestinian lives is to realise that the creation of a Palestinian state, for example, is not an end in itself, an effort to join the rest of the world of nations through the category of statehood, but was always, at least for the countless lives that have fought and continue to fight for it, a means towards true liberation and freedom – towards a decolonised life.

Indian face painted with the blood of innocents!

Attiya Munawer

The UN has created a picture of helplessness. While the European Union and all other international organizations are playing the role of a silent spectator. The silence of international organizations makes sense that non-Muslims are in power there, but the indifference of the Muslim Ummah to the atrocities against Kashmiris is the most painful

NOT only Pakistan but all the countries in the region are now well aware of India's planning and sponsorship of terrorist activities, as everyone has direct experience of it. However, now a multi-published American magazine in its investigative report has called India the world's largest terrorist country and a threat to world peace. The report clearly states that India has repeatedly used global terrorist organizations to further its regional interests. The American magazine has repeated the same things that Pakistan has been saying to the world in a civilized manner for a long time, but the Indian alliance with Daish (ISIS) is definitely surprising to the world. Pakistan has always exposed India's terrorist activities to the world with evidence, but the response has been disappointing. However, now that everything is coming out of the American magazine, the world's reaction may be slightly different. Now, India will try to link it with Pakistan and distort the facts, but no such attempt can succeed, because the face of India is painted with the blood of innocents.

It is clear that Pakistan has long been a victim of Indian terrorism. The arrest of Kulbushan Jadeo is a great proof that Indian intelligence agencies are sponsoring terrorist organizations. The UN monitoring team confirmed that these organizations were involved in cross-border terrorist attacks against Pakistani military and civilian targets. Those who claimed responsibility for the terrorist attack that killed 142 children at Army Public School Peshawar had contacts with India. Pakistan submitted several pieces of evidence of Indian terrorism to the UN Counter-Terrorism Committee with these names, including Ajoy Mistry, Angara Appaji and Gobinda Pataik. India is also financing and organizing mercenary terrorist organizations to attack Pakistan and obstruct the China-Pakistan Economic Corridor (CPEC). India has used terrorism as a weapon against all its neighbors and especially Pakistan and its Muslim population as well as the citizens of occupied Jammu and Kashmir.

In this context, the world is well aware that India is the biggest terrorist of the present era. The world has been watching Indian terrorism for decades, but no one is being affected. The United Nations has created a picture of helplessness. While the European Union and all other international organizations are playing the role of a silent spectator. The silence of international organizations makes sense that non-Muslims are in power there, but the indifference of the Muslim Ummah to the atrocities against Kashmiris is the most painful.

This issue is condemned by Turkey and Malaysia, while other Muslim countries are silent on Indian atrocities. Pakistan raises its voice against atrocities against Kashmiris at all levels and is taking steps to keep the Kashmir issue alive. Prime Minister Imran Khan is also highlighting the Kashmir issue on all major platforms in the world. Pakistan is in favor of allowing Kashmiris to decide its future, while India is against giving Kashmiris the right to self-determination. The love and emotional attachment of the Pakistan Army to Kashmir is unconditional. The position of Pakistan Army is that Kashmir runs like blood in our veins.

On the contrary, while India continues to carry out terrorist activities in Pakistan, including Kashmir, the list of Indian operations on the Line of Control is very long. So far, thousands of unarmed, innocent Pakistanis have fallen victim to Indian terrorism. Despite these actions, Pakistan has proved to be a peace-loving country and presented the facts to the world, but in view of the huge market and financial interests, the world has remained prudently silent. Even Muslim countries have preferred to remain silent rather than raise their voices over India's escalating actions. The international community seems to be reluctant to take legal action against Hindu-Indian civil and military personnel involved in state terrorism, war crimes and crimes against humanity in Occupied Jammu and Kashmir.

How big a threat Indian aggression is to the world and this threat will increase with each passing day. The American magazine has made it clear to the world, along with this American magazine has also exposed the nexus of the Indian government with terrorists. After the unveiling, the world will have to break its silence of interest and play its role in stopping the Indian aggression; otherwise, all the oppressed and exploited nations may resort to armed struggle for their protection.

Eleven refugees dead after boat sinks off Tunisia

DNA

TUNIS: At least 11 people died, including eight women and three children, and seven others were rescued when a boat carrying refugees sank off southern Tunisia, officials said late on Sunday.

A police source said the boat carrying 27 people, all African nationals, sank off the coast of the port city of Sfax. Countries in North Africa like Tunisia and Libya are seen as a starting point for migrants and refugees, many of them fleeing wars and hunger, who want to reach Europe via the Mediterranean Sea.

More than 620 people are feared to have drowned in the Mediterranean this year – a dangerous sea journey that has killed at least 20,000 since 2014, according to data gathered by the International Organization for Migration (IOM). In recent years, many European countries have hardened their immigration process, drawing condemnation from human rights groups and aid agencies, who have repeatedly pointed out the inadequate response by maritime authorities when alerted of people left adrift in rickety boats. About 17,000 people arrived in Italy and Malta this year by boat from Libya and Tunisia. While the number is a threefold increase compared with 2019, it is still drastically lower compared with the previous year.

Amnesty accuses Tanzania gov't of stifling dissent

DNA

DODOMA: Tanzanian President John Magufuli's government has built up a formidable arsenal of laws to stifle all forms of dissent ahead of this month's elections, rights group Amnesty International said in a new report on Monday. Authorities have effectively clamped down on the rights to freedom of expression and peaceful assembly, according to the report. Security forces have arrested opposition candidates on bogus charges, stripping them of their right to freedom of assembly, association and movement in recent months, amnesty claimed. "Tanzania has weaponised the law to the point that no one really knows when they are on the right or wrong side of it," Deprose Muchena, Amnesty International's director for East and Southern Africa, said. "Politicians have been arrested for holding or attending meetings, media houses suspended and banned, online activism criminalised, and NGOs stifled with endless regulations," Muchena added. The East African country is heading to the polls on October 28. President Magufuli is seeking a second five-year term and is being challenged by 14 other candidates. Earlier this month, authorities suspended the election campaign of leading opposition candidate Tundu Lissu for seven days over accusations of inciting violence in the run-up to the vote.

'Trump campaign ad twists my words on COVID-19'

MONITORING DESK

NEW YORK: US top government scientist Anthony Fauci said an advertisement aired by Donald Trump's re-election campaign was edited to make it seem like he endorsed the president's handling of the coronavirus pandemic. The 30-second campaign advertisement cites Trump's personal experience with the virus – "President Trump is recovering from the coronavirus, and so is America," it says – before including a brief clip in which Fauci appears to praise the president's response to the pandemic. "I can't imagine that anybody could be doing more," Fauci is shown as saying, creating the clear impression he is referring to Trump. But a complete clip of Fauci's comments, made during an interview in March with Fox News, shows the doctor saying: "I have been devoting almost full time on this. I'm down at the White House virtually every day with the task force. It's every single day. So, I can't imagine that under any circumstances that anybody could be doing more."

Eliminating terrorists a priority: Bashar al-Assad

The President added in an interview said that the US, Turkish presence on the Syrian territory is occupation that should be eliminated

DNA

DAMASCUS: President Bashar al-Assad has affirmed that the war against terrorism is not over as long as we have terrorists occupying some areas of our country and committing different kinds of crimes and assassinations.

The President added in an interview said that the US, Turkish presence on the Syrian territory is occupation that should be eliminated.

Question 1: Mr. President, thank you very much for giving us this opportunity to have this interview at these days when we remember that five years ago the Russian assistance came to Syria. So, after five years of the Russian military operation, nowadays can you say that the war in Syria now is over?

President Assad: No, definitely not. As long as you have terrorists occupying some areas of our country and committing different kinds of crimes and assassinations and other crimes, it's not over, and I think their supervisors are keen to make it continue for a long time. That's what we believe.

Question 2: And what moments of heroism of the Russians do you recall and keep in your heart? Which of them do you consider worth telling to your grandchildren, let's say?

President Assad: There are so many, and I remember some of them, of course. After five years of this cooperation between the Syrian and the Russian army in a vicious war, I think heroism is becoming a collective act; it's not individual, it's not only a few cases of heroism that you remember. For example, if you think about military aircraft pilots – the air force, Russian pilots kept flying over the terrorists on a daily basis, risking their lives, and you had a few aircrafts that had been shot down by the terrorists. If you talk about the other officers, they are supporting the Syrian army not in the rear lines, but in the front lines and as a consequence you had martyrs. What I'm going to tell my grandchildren someday is not only about this heroism, but I'm also going to talk about these common values that we have in both our armies that made us brothers during this war; these noble values, faithful to their causes, defending civilians, defending the innocent. Many things to talk about in this war.

Question 3: And what moment does symbolize for you a turning point during this conflict, during this war?

President Assad: It's been now nearly ten years since the war started, so we have many turning points that I can mention, not only one. The first is in 2013 when we started liberating many areas, especially the middle of Syria, from al-Nusra. Then in 2014, it was in the other direction when ISIS appeared suddenly with American support and they occupied a very important part of Syria and Iraq at the same time; this is when the terrorists started occupying other areas, because ISIS was able to distract the Syrian Army from fulfilling its mission in liberating the western part of Syria. Then the other turning point was when the Russians came to Syria in 2015 and we started liberating together many areas. In that stage, after the Russians came to Syria to support the Syrian Army, I'd say the turning point was to liberate the eastern part of Aleppo; this is where the liberation of other areas in Syria started from that point. It was important because of the importance of Aleppo, and because it was the beginning of the liberation – the large-scale liberation, that continued later to Damascus, to the rest of Aleppo recently, and other areas in the eastern part of Syria and the southern part. So, these are the main turning points. If you put them together, all of them are strategic and all of them changed the course of this war. Question 4: I now will turn to some actual news, and we in Russia follow what now is happening in the region of the Armenian and Azerbaijanian conflict, and definitely Turkey plays a role there. Is it negative or positive, that is not for me to judge, but I would like to ask you about Turkey's and Erdogan's policies. So, in recent years, Turkey has been trying to maximize its international influence. We all see its presence in Libya, its intervention into Syria, territorial disputes with Greece, and the now open support to Azerbaijan. What do you think about that kind of behavior of Ankara and Erdogan personally, and should the international community pay more attention to this sort of neo-Ottomanism.

President Assad: Let's be blunt and clear; Erdogan has supported terrorists in Syria, and he's been supporting terrorists in Libya, and he was the main instigator and initiator of the recent conflict that has been going on in Nagorno-Karabakh between Azerbaijan and Armenia. So, I would sum his behavior as dangerous, for different reasons. First of all, because it reflects the Muslim Brotherhood behavior; Muslim Brotherhood is a terrorist extremist group. Second, because he's creating war in different areas to distract his own public opinion in Turkey from focusing on his behavior inside Turkey, especially after his scandalous relations with ISIS in Syria; everybody knows that ISIS used to sell Syrian oil through Turkey under the umbrella of the American air forces and of course the involvement of the Turks in selling this oil. So, this is his goal, and this is dangerous. So, whether the international community should be aware or not, the word "international community" in reality is only a few countries; the great powers and rich countries, and let's call them the influencers on the political arena. The majority of this international community is complicit with Turkey in supporting the terrorists. So, they know what Turkey is doing, they are happy about what Turkey is doing, and Turkey is an arm for those countries in fulfilling their policies and dreams in this region. So, no, we cannot bet on the international community at all. You can bet on the international law, but it doesn't exist because there's no institution to implement the international law. So, we have to depend on ourselves in Syria and on the support of our friends.

Iran calls on Azerbaijan, Armenia to military escalations

FOREIGN DESK

TEHRAN: The Iranian Foreign Ministry on Monday called on Azerbaijan and Armenia to halt military escalations and abide by a ceasefire between the two countries. "Iran calls on the two parties to exercise more self-restraint, condemns the missile attacks on the vital infrastructure, the residential areas of cities, and the killing of civilians," ministry spokesman Saeed Khatibzadeh said in a statement. Conveying condolences to the families of victims, Khatibzadeh called on the two sides to abide by the ceasefire, continue their negotiations in line with international law, adhere to the territorial integrity of each other, and "evacuation of the occupied cities".

Khatibzadeh said that Iran was ready to help facilitate peace talks for achieving "permanent and sustainable peace and solution" in the region. Following meetings in Moscow on Oct. 10, Azerbaijan and Armenia agreed on a humanitarian ceasefire so that conflicting sides could retrieve bodies left on the battlefield in Karabakh, also known as Upper Nagorno-Karabakh, and hold prisoner exchange. Armenia's attacks continued despite the humanitarian truce. An Armenian missile attack hit Azerbaijan's second largest city of Ganja, violating a temporary ceasefire, at 2 a.m. local time on Sunday (2200GMT Saturday).

Uzbekistan: A new system for working with women and youth defined

In recent years, Uzbekistan has created a vertical system for implementing state policy on women and youth issues up to the level of mahallas

DNA

TASHKENT: President of the Republic of Uzbekistan Shavkat Mirziyoyev chaired a videoconference on measures to increase the role of women and youth in society and ensure their employment. Women and youth make up a significant part of the population, and solving their problems is an essential part of social work. In recent years, Uzbekistan has created a vertical system for implementing state policy on women and youth issues up to the level of mahallas. To address youth issues in each district, a separate position of deputy hokim with a staff of up to 3 specialists was introduced, in each region – deputy hokim with a staff of 4 specialists, 3 and 11 staff units were allocated to the territorial departments of the Agency for Youth Affairs, respectively.

address women's issues at the mahalla level, a separate post of Deputy Chairman of the Mahalla has been introduced, at the district level – Deputy Head of the Department for Mahalla and Family Affairs, which is assigned 2 specialists, at the regional level up to 8 staff units have been allocated. In addition, People's Reception Offices of the President and trade unions are assigned to address issues of youth and women, respectively. However, the ability of these agencies and four local sectors to effectively organize the work in this area raises questions. In this regard, the introduction of a new system for working with women and youth has been determined. As is known, in order to provide social support to the population, Uzbekistan has started maintaining a list of families in need of financial assistance and support, also known as the "iron notebook". Similarly, a "youth notebook" and a "women's notebook" will be formed in each mahalla, district, city and region. These lists will be kept separately from the "iron notebook". They will include young people and women in need of social, legal and psychological support, as well as those seeking to acquire new knowledge and professions. As a result, systematic, targeted work will be established with them. System of work with youth and women in the example of Khatirchi district and Yangiyev city was discussed at the meeting. Responsible persons were instructed to develop a standard model of this system and test it in the Republic of Karakalpakstan, Tashkent city, one city and district of each region, in 28 territorial units. Heads of sectors and representatives of responsible agencies were instructed to study the situation in each mahalla, talk with each woman and young man, identify their interests and needs, and develop targeted measures on this basis. "From now on, we need to establish a system of employment of the unemployed by visiting people's homes. The situation will change where managers visit homes and resolve issues. The main goal is to move from the economic stability to efficiency".

UK bars, clubs challenge lockdown plan

The Night Time Industries Association (NTIA), a UK trade body, told the Reuters News Agency late on Sunday that the industry has taken legal action to prevent lockdown measures from being imposed. The judicial review, reported earlier by the Financial Times, will argue that no evidence supports hospitality venues having contributed to the spread of COVID-19. "The industry has been left with no other option but to legally challenge the so called 'common sense' approach narrative from government on the implementation of further restrictions across the North of England," NTIA CEO Michael Kill said in an email.

'Taliban consider ceasefire their political defeat'

KABUL: Afghanistan First Vice President Amrullah Saleh on Monday said that the Taliban consider the ceasefire a political defeat, believing they make people thirsty for the grave-kind of peace like the one in the 90s by incalculable killings. According to Saleh, the defeat of the Taliban is inevitable because it is not possible to impose their method by force on people and the pluralistic society of Afghanistan, nor do the Taliban have a political agenda the people can rely on. The main reason for the increase in the Taliban's "absurd and bloody" attacks on Afghan people is the group's fear and ignorance of political developments, he said. Saleh exclaimed the Taliban have underestimated the national will of the people; launched many attacks with a misconception of the peace process. He added that in many parts of the country, where violence has increased, the Taliban faced resistance by locals. Therefore, the Taliban will not reap any strategic or political benefits from the bloodshed; because violence as a political tool is hated and rejected. Unfortunately, we will experience another phase of the crisis to break this mentality that is based on murder, he further said. According to Saleh, the Taliban's claim is unattractive and all their attention and investment is to keeping the society in darkness and ignorance so they can secure their proxy rule. — DNA

Pak reaches out to FATF members for support

WEB DESK

ISLAMABAD: Ahead of the crucial meeting of the Financial Action Task Force (FATF), Islamabad is reaching out to member states of Paris-based body to seek their support for acknowledging Pakistan's progress on 27-point action plan that may help it exit from the "grey list", officials familiar with the development said. The global watchdog for curbing terror financing and money laundering will be holding its virtual plenary session from October 21 to 23. Among the agenda items include reviewing Pakistan's progress on the 27-point action plan. Last week Foreign Minister Shah Mehmood Qureshi telephoned his Saudi, Turkish and Malaysian counterparts to brief them about Pakistan's significant progress to implement the FATF plan of action, an official privy to the move said. Saudi Arabia, Turkey and Malaysia are members of the 39-member FATF and their support is crucial for Pakistan to avert any adverse decision during the plenary. The official statement issued after Qureshi's telephonic conversation with his counterparts from these three countries did not mention that FATF was the subject of discussions. However, the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, told media that one of the purposes of Qureshi's telephonic conversation with top diplomats of these three countries was to seek their support at the upcoming FATF plenary. Pakistan is unlikely to be placed on the blacklist given that it has the support of at least three countries including China, Malaysia and Turkey to veto any such move. Islamabad needs three votes to avoid getting blacklisted. But officials noted that Pakistan had been making efforts to ensure that it is removed from "grey list" and for that it needs the support of 12 countries out of 39 FATF members. Pakistan approached the friendly countries including Saudi Arabia to inform them that Islamabad's case needed to be reviewed objectively, the official said. "We are telling our friends that Pakistan's progress on the 27-point action plan needs an acknowledgment," the official added. Pakistan was placed on the grey list in June 2018 for failing to take adequate measures against money laundering and terror financing. It was then given a 27-point action plan with a warning that failing to implement it would lead to its blacklisting. The official observed that Pakistan fully complied with or made significant progress on at least 21 points. When asked, the official refused to speculate the outcome of FATF plenary but was confident that Pakistan would not be placed on the blacklist. While it is relatively easy to conclude that Pakistan will not be blacklisted, it is unclear if FATF would remove the country from its grey list. To garner the support of 12 member countries, Pakistan needs the support of major players such as the United States. The officials maintained that Pakistan had been in touch with the US on the issue and that the American authorities acknowledged Islamabad's progress but were yet to commit to support its case. The US authorities, contrary to the perception that FATF was being used as political tool against Pakistan, insisted that Washington had no control over the FATF process as all members took decisions independently. Observers, however, believe that the US support for Pakistan would help strengthen its case at the FATF.
