Unrestricted freedom of speech contributing to degradation of moral values in societies, says Gen Munir at Margalla Dialogue 2024

ISLAMABAD: Chief of Army Staff (COAS) General Asim Munir has castigated India, saying due to its extremist "Hindutva ideology" minorities are not safe abroad especially in the United States, United Kingdom and Canada. "India's cruelty and brutality in Occupied Jammu and Kashmir is also a continuation of Hindutva ideology and policy," the army chief said on Friday while addressing a special ceremony of Margalla Dialogue 2024, organised by Islamabad Policy Research Institute (IPRI). Gen Munir was apparently referring to India's global "extrajudicial" network of state-sponsored targeted killings. Besides Pakistan, Canada and the US have also accused Indian agents of being linked to one assassination and one attempt in their countries. Indian government is allegedly involved in the killing of Hardeep Singh Nijjar, a Canadian citizen and prominent campaigner for a sovereign Sikh state - known as Khalistan in northern India. The United States Commission on International Religious Freedom (USCIRF), in its 2024 annual report, highlighted how throughout 2024, individuals have been killed, beaten, and lynched by vigilante groups, religious leaders have been arbitrarily arrested, and homes and places of worship have been demolished. "It describes the use of misinformation and disinformation, including hate speech, by government officials to incite violent attacks against religious minorities and their places of worship," the report stated. In Jan 2024, former foreign secretary Syrus Qazi said Pakistan had "credible evidence" for Indian agents' link to the killings of two

Among these, canopy trees like Siris, Pipal, Bakin, and Shisham are particularly vital for improving air quality in cities. He emphasized that these trees are not only an aesthetic asset to urban landscapes but also play a significant role in air purification and environmental balance. "A single healthy canopy tree can provide oxygen for up to four people," Gulzar stated. "Furthermore, 1,075 trees planted on just one hectare of land can absorb six to eight tons of carbon dioxide every day." APP However, he lamented that the unchecked cutting of these trees in urban areas, especially in Peshawar in the past, has exacerbated the city's growing pollution problems, contributing directly to the smog and air pollution that could be seen even with a naked eve while standing on Surey bridge. Peshawar, once known for its lush green landscapes and rich biodiversity, has seen a dramatic decline in its tree cover over the past few decades. Historically, the Peshawar Valley was home to a dense forest ecosystem, which not only helped purify the air but also acted as a natural water source and a habitat for wildlife. This biodiversity was instrumental in maintaining the ecological balance of the region .-

ISLAMABAD: The All Parties Hurriyat Conference (APHC) has said that BJP-led Indian government is using its military might and Hindutva-driven policies to suppress the Kashmiris' legitimate struggle for their inalienable right to self-determination in Indian illegally occupied Jammu and Kashmir(IIOJK). According to Kashmir Media Service, APHC spokesman Advocate Abdul Rashid Minhas in a statement issued in Srinagar urged the Indian government to shun its anti-Kashmir and communal agendas in the internationally recognized disputed territory and take concrete steps for settlement of the Kashmir dispute as per relevant resolutions of the United Nations Security Council, which call for a plebiscite to allow Kashmiris to determine their future. Minhas emphasized the sacrifices of over half a million Kashmiris who laid down their lives, the hardships faced by tens of thousands who were forced to migrate to Pakistan, Azad Kashmir, and other parts of the world, as well as the ongoing suffering of thousands of political leaders and activists, including the APHC leadership, who remain subjected to illegal detention, will not be allowed to go waste. He reaffirmed that the Kashmiris' unwavering struggle for self-determination will continue, no matter the cost. The APHC spokesman also expressed grave concern over the ongoing wave of atrocities, including arbitrary arrests, relentless cordon and search operations, house raids, and the seizure of properties in the occupied territory. Minhas condemned the heavy-handed tactics employed by the BJP-led Hindutva government and its appointed Lieutenant Governor in IIOJK, who, with the help of the Indian Army and police, have stifled all political and social activities in the occupied territory through state terrorism and brute force. He denounced the widespread use of military might to crush the Kashmiris' popular demand for self-determination, a right guaranteed by the UNSC through its several resolutions.-APP

Prof. Tahir also suggested establishing industry advisory boards to guide curriculum development and invite industry experts to share their experiences. Sufficient fertilizer stocks available for Rabi season

ISLAMABAD: The Fertilizer Review Committee (FRC) on Friday expressed complete satisfaction with the country's current fertilizer reserves, ensuring adequate supplies of both DAP and urea for the upcoming Rabi season. The committee met under the chairmanship of Federal Minister for Industries, Production, and National Food Security Rana Tanveer Hussain to assess the stock position of DAP and urea fertilizers for the Rabi season 2024-25, said a news release. The minis ter highlighted the increasing demand for DAP fertilizer in the country, with a 44% surge in DAP off take. This rise in demand is attributed to the Punjab government's Kisan Card initiative. The DAP offtake estimate for October 2024 was 215,000 tonnes, which has increased by 44% to 309,000 tonnes. This increase is mainly due to the disbursement of Rs 75 billion by the government of Punjab as an interest-free loan through the Kisan Card (Rs 30,000 per acre for seeds, phosphorus, and nitrogen) for 500,000 farmers, each with up to 5 acres (Rs 150,000 per farmer). So far, farmers have drawn Rs 18 billion to procure fertilizer. This initiative by the Punjab government is expected to encourage the farming community to apply more DAP for balanced fertilizer use. The trend of increased DAP off-take in October is expected to continue through November and December 2024. Rana Tanyeer assured that additional fertilizer stocks are available to meet farmers' needs, helping them achieve higher yields during the Rabi season.-APP

Mobile learning festival in collaboration with Pak Railways

ISLAMABAD: Minister for Planning, Development and Special Initiatives Professor Ahsan Iqbal on Friday suggested launching a Mobile Learning Festival in collaboration with Pakistan Railways, providing students from every district an opportunity to listen to the struggle stories of successful personalities and set their future goals. "The Ministry of Education will be asked to take this initiative. It will help students explore their capabilities and set their future direction with complete determination," he said while addressing students at the inaugural ceremony of the Pakistan Learning Festival-2024, held at Islamabad College for Boys, G-6/3. He remarked that Muslims of the Indian subcontinent managed to secure Pakistan after great sacrifices, and it was the responsibility of the younger generation to make it a proud nation by 2047, when both Pakistan and India would celebrate their 100th year of independence. "Pakistan's youth should celebrate this milestone with pride, without any excuses for lagging behind in development," he emphasized. Citing an example, he said the country needed to give its full effort over the next 23 years, much like an athlete running a 1,200-meter race: maintaining a calculated pace for the first 1,000 meters, and then giving full energy during the final 200 meters to cross the finish line and clinch victory. He also mentioned Pakistan's development journey since its inception in 1947, when the newly-born state had nothing even common pins to bind papers in offices. Today, however, he said Pakistan manufactured the JF-17 Thunder aircraft, became the world's first Islamic nuclear power and seventh overall, and has built a digital backbone with fiber optic cables running from Gilgit-Baltistan to Karachi. Additionally, the country has increased its number of universities from 2-3 to around 250, he added. "Pakistan's situation is like a glass of water that is half-full and half-empty. We just need to fill it with hard work, greater unity, positive and constructive thinking, moving forward with a strong commitment to attain progress and prosperity among the community of nations," he said. Ahsan Iqbal said setting aside negativity, disappointment, hatred and intolerance was essential for achieving set goals and realizing big dreams. "There should be no virus of hatred and bias in the mind to move forward in life and achieve success," he remarked.-DNA

ver the past week, four of the world's more important multilateral institutions - and hundreds of world leaders - have been working hard to foster international cooperation. Pity most of their work is likely to be in vain. Instead of focusing on the looming challenges - from slowing climate change and agreeing on finance for poor countries that are immediately threatened, to reforming global institutions and settling wars in Ukraine and the Middle East - leaders have been diverted by how to "Trump-proof" their economies. In Baku in Azerbaijan, thousands of leaders and officials at Cop29, the UN climate change conference, are wrestling with the challenge of slowing global warming and finding the trillions of dollars needed to protect poor, climate-vulnerable countries. But they must surely know they are spitting in the wind. The financing commitments they seek are unlikely to be worth the paper they are written on. Donald Trump, who has dismissed the climate crisis as a Chinese hoax, is far likelier to withdraw America again from the 2015 Paris Agreement and divert investment to boosting the US oil and gas industry than he is to sign multibillion-dollar cheques to help poor economies deal with climate loss and damage. And it is not just Trump who cannot be trusted. As Harvard professor Dani Rodrik notes: "The US and other major economies are woefully ill-disposed to provide the public goods the world economy really needs; and given the mood in their capitals these days, their disposition is unlikely to improve any time soon." In Lima, Peru, US President Joe Biden meets Chinese President Xi Jinping on the sidelines of the Apec summit as the lamest of lame ducks. (Is there not deep irony that Barack Obama flew into the 2016 Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation summit - also in Lima - as a lame duck days after Trump first won the presidential election?) As the other 20 Apec leaders look to commit to "creating the conditions necessary for trade to become more open, equitable, transparent and inclusive", everyone in the room knows Biden's signature will mean nothing. The real conversations will surely be focused on Trump's tariff plans and how best to parry them. And most of the excitement was likely reserved for Xi's inauguration of a US$1.3 billion mega port in Chancay, 60km northeast of Lima, and the fact that the Chinese leader arrived for a state visit with a big business delegation. While Trump beats his chest in Mar-a-Lago, other Apec members are quietly getting on with business - perhaps the most effective Trump-proofing strategy of all. Whether Trump plans to withdraw the United States from Apec - or whether the US remains relevant to Apec's mission of free and open trade and investment - will nevertheless be at the back of many nervous minds. In Rio de Janeiro, Brazil's President Luiz Inacio Lula da Silva, is making final preparations to host next week's G20 summit. His agenda priorities include climate change and the global energy transition, reform of governance at the World Bank and International Monetary Fund - and a billionaires' tax. He, too, must surely know he is spitting in the wind. Given that Trump now has Elon Musk constantly at his elbow, billionaire supporters from Stephen Schwarzman to Jeff Yass, and Jeff Bezos, Mark Zuckerberg and Tim Cook rushing to congratulate him, da Silva must be in dreamland if he believes his billionaires' bill will see the light of day any time soon

Global climate governance

he 29th session of the Conference of the Parties to the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change (COP29) is taking place in Baku, Azerbaijan, at a time when global climate governance will likely enter an era of "uncertainty." At the conference, countries are generally concerned about whether the US will assume the responsibility of a major power in global climate governance in the future, and COP29 is considered an important opportunity to promote actions to respond to the climate crisis. As of May this year, 151 countries have committed to carbon neutrality targets, with 120 of them enshrining their dedication through laws or policy documents. In the face of increasingly severe climate challenges, China is leading the way with its carbon peak and carbon neutrality goals, accelerating the comprehensive green transformation of its economy and society. The new European Commission is also committed to accelerating the EU's green transition. In fiscal year 2024, the World Bank Group delivered a record $42.6 billion in climate finance. The UK has closed its last coal-fired power station, and Australia is pushing for net-zero emissions and energy transition. On the other hand, as the US accounts for about 13.5 percent of global carbon emissions in 2023, if it truly "unravels Biden's climate legacy," by 2030, the country's greenhouse gas emissions will increase by more than 4 billion tons compared to 2005 levels. Ahead of COP29, the World Meteorological Organization released its latest report. The "State of the Climate 2024 Update for COP29" says concentrations of the three key greenhouse gases in the atmosphere - carbon dioxide, methane, and nitrous oxide - reached record high observed levels in 2023. And the year 2024 is on track to be the warmest year on record after an extended streak of exceptionally high monthly global mean temperatures. As climate plans of many countries fall far short of expected goals, COP29 hopes to address three focus priorities through its two main pillars - "enhancing ambition" and "enabling action": making emergency emissions reductions, doing more to protect people from the ravages of the climate crisis, and tearing down the walls to climate finance. The aim is for parties to reach a fair and ambitious new climate financing target, improve Article 6 of the Paris Agreement, strengthen global financial institutions, and ensure private sector commitments to climate action. Financing discussions are a key focus at COP29. In addressing the climate crisis, the most important issue is not financing or technology, but the fact that the existing climate governance systems are currently unable to tackle the climate crisis effectively. Two months ago, the UN held the Summit of the Future and adopted the "Pact for the Future," which covers new areas and addresses issues that have been unresolved for decades, including several points of consensus on sustainable development, climate and development financing. However, we still need to accelerate our efforts. At COP29, the "China Pavilion" received special attention from attendees and the media.

What the Gulf wants from the incoming Trump admin

Dr. Abdel Aziz Aluwaisheg

At the economic level, the GCC shares Trump's interest in combating predatory economic practices but believes that this should be done by fixing the global trading system, which has pitted industrialized countries against developing countries. Because that system is dysfunctional, major trading nations have abandoned cooperation and engaged in a mutually destructive cycle of actions and retaliations. The first Trump administration imposed a long series of protectionist tariffs, including on GCC exports to the US. To go by Trump's election rhetoric, his new administration may initiate additional punishing tariffs against China, which could spark another cycle of retaliation

he speed with which Donald Trump is as-sembling his team indicates that he wants to hit the ground running come his inauguration on Jan. 20. Choosing Steve Witkoff, a close adviser and confidante, as special envoy to the Middle East could mean that the president plans to be hands-on when it comes to this region. During Trump's first term (2017-2021), the Gulf Cooperation Council, collectively and bilaterally through its member states, enjoyed a close and mutually beneficial relationship, ever since Trump broke with tradition by choosing Saudi Arabia for his first trip abroad and meeting with GCC, Arab and Muslim leaders in Rivadh in May 2017. Although at times there were differences of opinion between the two sides, especially on the Israel-Palestine conflict, their strategic partnership continued through Trump's last days in office. Most likely, that spirit of cooperation will continue and strengthen over the next four years. What the Gulf wants from Trump's second term can be summarized under three main headings: political, economic and cultural. Trump's motto of "ending all wars" is appealing and so is his prioritizing of economic objectives. We share an interest in combating illegal migration and predatory trading practices, although we may differ on the means. We would also like to join hands in combating hate and intolerance. At the political and strategic levels, the GCC wants to dial back raging conflicts and return to diplomacy and the pacific resolution of disputes, as the UN Charter calls for. There is little doubt that the international system is broken because of the intense disagreements between the permanent members of the UN Security Council, which render the organization unable to play its key role in maintaining peace and security around the world, as is evident in its inability to stop Israel's war on Gaza and Lebanon. On Gaza and the underlying Israel-Palestine conflict, the GCC would like to work more closely with the US on ending the conflict. The international community has spoken clearly about the parameters of the solution, based on the UN Charter and resolutions. There are only a handful of countries that still tolerate Israel's genocidal war in Gaza and its maximalist approach to the underlying conflict. Last month, the Global Alliance for the Implementation of the Two-State Solution, of which the US is a member, together with about 90 other countries, articulated the global consensus on these issues. This includes an immediate and permanent ceasefire in Gaza, reunifying it with the West Bank under the Palestinian Authority and embarking on an irreversible path toward an independent and viable Palestinian state along the 1967 borders. The extraordinary summit held in Riyadh last week expressed the unified voice of the Arab and Islamic worlds on the conflict and called for accountability for the unspeakable atrocities committed by Israel in both Gaza and the West Bank. So, what is needed in the region is de-escalation and for the way to be prepared for sustainable solutions in Gaza, the West Bank, Lebanon and elsewhere. Diplomacy should also be the starting point in dealing with Iran and its regional network of supporters and allies. At the economic level, the GCC shares Trump's interest in combating predatory economic practices but believes that this should be done by fixing the global trading system, which has pitted industrialized countries against developing countries. Because that system is dysfunctional, major trading nations have abandoned cooperation and engaged in a mutually destructive cycle of actions and retaliations. The first Trump administration imposed a long series of protectionist tariffs, including on GCC exports to the US. To go by Trump's election rhetoric, his new administration may initiate additional punishing tariffs against China, which could spark another cycle of retaliation. The best way to deal with trade disputes is through the World Trade Organization, by doubling efforts to reenergize the organization and strengthen its dispute resolution mechanism. Finally, we want the new White House to lead on cultural reconciliation and mutual understanding. Cultural estrangement has led to a rise in hate speech and hate crimes in many parts of the world. Some of the pernicious outgrowths of this intolerance can be found in rising racist rhetoric, Islamophobia and antisemitism. The Trump administration would find ready partners in the GCC and the wider Arab and Islamic worlds to work together on toning down the rhetoric of cultural war and to reinforce cultural and religious tolerance. Fortunately, there exists an extensive framework for cooperation under the GCC-US Strategic Partnership, which includes engagement at the heads of state level, as well as at the ministerial and technical levels. There are more than 10 working groups covering many aspects of this partnership, including political and defense issues, cyber threats, maritime security, air defense and counterterrorism. There are also working groups dedicated to specific issues, such as Iran and Yemen. The GCC states and the US are active members of the US-led Combined Maritime Forces, a coalition of 46 nations that operates out of Bahrain through five task forces covering the Gulf, the Red Sea and areas in between. The long-standing GCC-US Trade and Investment Dialogue and the 2012 framework agreement on economic cooperation provide appropriate channels for coordinating trade policies. As the US and GCC countries are major producers of energy, they have overlapping interests in both conventional and renewable energies. They have an abiding imperative to coordinate on both types of energy. As most GCC currencies are pegged to the dollar, it is important to continue to coordinate closely on monetary policy, as decisions taken by the Fed affect GCC economies and have a direct impact on monetary policy. On culture, the framework of the GCC-US Strategic Partnership allows for engagement to promote mutual understanding, although this area was in the past dealt with bilaterally with member states. Rising cultural tensions in the US and elsewhere make it necessary to develop and grow cooperation at the regional level to deal with this phenomenon.

China-West academic decoupling...

Zhuowen Li

The erosion of academic exchange between China and the West has a significant human impact. Chinese students, particularly those in STEM (science, technology, engineering and maths) fields, increasingly find themselves caught in a web of suspicion, facing lengthy security reviews and visa restrictions. Some are forced to choose between completing their studies and visiting family, as one-year academic visas make return trips risky. Others see their academic dreams derailed entirely, shying away from pursuing degrees in the US because of security screening and pivoting to Europe only he recent decision by ETH Zurich, Swit-zerland's top-ranked university, to restrict admission of students from China and certain other nations marks a troubling milestone in the growing academic divide between China and the West. ETH Zurich recently announced stringent security screening measures which affect applicants from 23 countries, including China, to its master's and doctoral programmes. The policy calls for scrutiny not just of an applicant's nationality but their previous education, funding sources and intended field of study. In September, Georgia Institute of Technology in the US announced it was ending its long-standing collaboration with China's Tianjin University. It cited government security concerns after Tianjin University was added to the US Department of Commerce's Entity List in 2020, making the partnership "no longer tenable". These moves highlight how deeply geopolitical tensions are reshaping global academic exchange. The deterioration of educational ties between China and Western countries foreshadows broader repercussions for scientific progress and international understanding. During the past decade, US-China educational ties have transformed dramatically to a point where the landscape is now one of reciprocal distrust and growing barriers. US students studying in China plummeted from a peak of nearly 25,000 in 2012 to a mere 700 last year, while Chinese students' enrolment in US universities hit a decade low in 2023. Now, this academic decoupling is spreading to Europe. ETH Zurich's restrictions are among the most extensive imposed by a Western university so far, but similar policies with regard to foreign students have emerged at universities in Germany and the Netherlands. The erosion of academic exchange between China and the West has a significant human impact. Chinese students, particularly those in STEM (science, technology, engineering and maths) fields, increasingly find themselves caught in a web of suspicion, facing lengthy security reviews and visa restrictions.

Some are forced to choose between completing their studies and visiting family, as one-year academic visas make return trips risky. Others see their academic dreams derailed entirely, shying away from pursuing degrees in the US because of security screening and pivoting to Europe only to find themselves in the crosshairs again. Moreover, these restrictive measures are reshaping the global flow of talent and knowledge. Western universities are likely to face a brain drain if such restrictions continue or are expanded. This would hurt the diversity of leading US and European institutions and ultimately weaken global scientific collaboration and innovation. More critically, the decline in scientific exchanges between China and the West weakens the world's collective ability to address challenges that require global collaboration, such as climate change and public health crises. In fields such as artificial intelligence safety and quantum computing, the isolation of research communities risks creating dangerous blind spots and duplicative efforts. These aren't just theoretical concerns. We have already seen the negative impact of reduced research collaboration on the productivity of ethnically Chinese scientists in the US. This academic decoupling could also affect future generations of policymakers and leaders. Without sustained people-to-people contact, it is hard to imagine future leaders navigating complex international relationships effectively. As exchange and cooperation dwindle, countries on both sides risk gradually losing their ability to understand each other. This could ultimately harm their own interests more than protect them as such understanding remains crucial even in a competitive or adversarial relationship. Justifications for restrictions on academic exchange often cite national security considerations and the risk of illicit technology transfer. While there are legitimate security concerns that universities need to address, the current trend of imposing broad restrictions based on nationality rather than specific risk factors threatens to throw out the baby with the bathwater. A more nuanced approach is needed - one that can safeguard sensitive research while preserving the international character of academic institutions. It is crucial to strike a balance between legitimate security concerns and the fundamental values of open academic exchange. Universities have long been bastions of international cooperation and cross-cultural understanding. By erecting barriers to collaboration, we risk undermining the very foundation of scientific progress and global problem-solving. Observers in both China and the West have noted that the optimism of scientific exchange strengthening all nations feels like ancient history. We have entered an era of mutual suspicion and increasing isolation. However, the stakes could not be higher right now. How we approach academic cooperation today will determine not only the future of international education but also the prospects for scientific progress and mutual understanding in an increasingly polarised world. Addressing global challenges such as climate change and public health crises requires diverse perspectives and collaborative solutions. As we confront these unprecedented issues, dismantling the bridges of cooperation built over decades is a choice we cannot afford.

US calls for 'sports diplomacy' "This department really prioritises the role that sports diplomacy has in connecting people," says Vedant Patel

WASHINGTON: In a surprising turn of events, the United States has urged the two neighboring countries India and Pakistan to adopt "sports diplomacy" as it connects people. US State Department's deputy spokesperson, Vedant Patel, stated this while responding to a query about Pakistan-India relations' affecting the big sports event. "Sports is certainly a potent and connecting force. This department really prioritises the role that sports diplomacy has in connecting people. It is something that I know is incredibly important to the US State Department," he said. The world of cricket is under a dilemma regarding the schedule of the Champions Trophy 2025 due to stubbornness of Indian cricket board and their government. Patel also said since it was something between India and Pakistan so it was certain for them to speak, whether it be through sports or other means." I will let them speak to their own bilateral relationship. Certainly not something for us to get in the middle of ...," he maintained. According to a recent update, the ICC has asked the BCCI to provide written justification for its decisions to not travel to Pakistan for the forthcoming multi-nation event. ICC last week informed the PCB that India would not tour Pakistan for the eight-team tournament. Pakistan has rejected the option of a hybrid arrangement that would allow India to play their matches at neutral venues, such as in the United Arab Emirates. Meanwhile, the PCB wrote to the sport's governing body seeking an explanation for India's refusal to send a team to the country for the mega cricket event. Sources privy to the development said that if the Indian cricket body failed to provide proper reasons, then the Indian team would be asked to participate in the cricketing event in Pakistan. If, for any reason, India refuses to play in Pakistan without valid reasons, another team may replace them in the Champions Trophy, they added. Tim Southee announced retirement from Test cricket

LONDON: Former New Zealand captain Tim Southee on Friday announced that he will retire from Test cricket after the upcoming Test series against England, with the 35-year-old set to finish up at his home ground in Hamilton. The irrepressible seam bowler made his debut against England at Napier in 2008 and has been a mainstay of New Zealand Test side since then. Southee has taken 385 wickets in 104 Tests during his 16-year-long career. He is the second-highest wicket-taker for New Zealand in Test cricket with Richard Hadlee standing at the top with 431 wickets. "Representing New Zealand was all I ever dreamed of growing up," Tim Southee said in his retirement announcement. "To play for the Black Caps for 18 years has been the greatest honour and privilege, but the time feels right to now step away from the game that has given so much to me. "Test cricket holds a special place in my heart, so to be able to play such a big series against the same opponent my Test career began against all those years ago, and on three grounds that are incredibly special to me, seems the perfect way to end my time in the Black Cap. "I'll always be so grateful to my family, friends, coaches, our fans and everyone involved in the game who has supported me and my career over the years. "It's been an amazing ride and I wouldn't change a thing." Tim Southee captained the side to six wins, six losses and two draws after taking over from Kane Williamson in 2022 before handing over the bator last month to Tom Latham, who led them to a 3-0 Test sweep in India. Southee's all-round skills and consistency have seen him become the only player in the world to claim more than 300 Test wickets, 200 ODI wickets and 100 T20 wickets. New Zealand Cricket (NZC) chief executive Scott Weenink saluted him as one of the country's finest players. "Tim [Southee] has been a constant in the improving fortunes of the Blackcaps and he'll be remembered as a giant of the modern New Zealand game," he said.-APP

Japan and Slovakia seal places in quarter-finals

New York: Japan and Slovakia produced stunning comebacks to beat Romania and the United States 2-1, respectively, and reach the quarter-finals of the Billie Jean King Cup on Thursday. Viktoria Hruncakova and Tereza Mihalikova had to dig deep to beat Ashlyn Krueger and Taylor Townsend 6-3 3-6 10-8 in the match tie-break of a thrilling doubles that went into the early hours of Friday. Townsend gave the U.S. the lead with a 7-5 6-4 win over 17-year-old Renata Jamrichova but Rebecca Sramkova leveled the tie with a gutsy 6-2 7-5 win over Danielle Collins, leaving it in the hands of the doubles to give Slovakia their hard-fought comeback in the first days of competitions in southern Spain's Malaga. Slovakia will now face Australia on Sunday. Earlier on Thursday, Japan produced a comeback of their own to beat Romania 2-1 and reach the quarter-finals for the first time since 2013. Missing former world number one Naomi Osaka who didn't make the trip to Spain due to an injury, Japan had to fight back after Nao Hibino lost the opening singles match of the day 6-2 6-4 against Ana Bogdan. Ena Shibahara, who was playing singles in place of Osaka, stepped up to beat Jaqueline Cristian 6-4 7-6(2) to level the tie. In the decisive doubles, Shuko Aoyama and Eri Hozumi booked Japan a spot in the last eight with a 6-1 7-5 victory against Elena Gabriela Ruse and Monica Niculescu.-APP

Williamson returns to New Zealand squad

AUCKLAND: Prolific New Zealand batter Kane Williamson has been included in the Test squad to face England after missing their recent 3-0 sweep in India with a groin injury.

The former skipper will once again team up with veteran seamer Tim Southee, who will retire from Test cricket after the three series starting in Christchurch on November 28.

Williamson has scored 8881 runs from 102 matches, the most by any batter from New Zealand, at an average of 54.48. The Black Caps called up bowling all-rounder Nathan Smith for the first time while uncapped quick Jacob Duffy was also included in the squad. But Ajaz Patel, who claimed 15 wickets against India, was surprisingly overlooked with Mitchell Santner the spin option, backed up by Glenn Phillips.Meanwhile, Ben Sears and Kyle Jamieson were not considered owing to their knee and back injuries respectively. "It's obviously a big series for the side in terms of the World Test Championship [WTC] and to also now be farewelling someone like Tim Southee only raises it up further," said Black Caps selector Sam Wells. The triumph in India propelled New Zealand back into contention for next year's World Test Championship final, but even a whitewash of England would not guarantee it. Ben Stokes' England suffered a 2-1 defeat in Pakistan last month. "It's also an exciting time for Nathan to be brought into the Test squad for the first time," added Wells. "Nathan is an exciting talent with a proven first-class record and I'm sure he will bring a lot of skill and energy to the group."-Agencies

Justice Mandokhail directed that the convention centre should be managed according to the institution's policy. The additional attorney general requested time to gather information regarding outstanding dues, to which Justice Aminuddin responded, "Obtain the information and update the court". England were well placed when he departed but it was left to Livingstone - having been dropped twice by Nicholas Pooran on six and eight, then again by Shimron Hetmyer on 21 - to try and finish the job. Jofra Archer bowled Pooran in between and when Mahmood had Hetmyer caught in the deep, West Indies were reeling. "If they were to target the energy sector again, this could be a tipping point," warned Matthias Schmale, the United Nations' resident humanitarian coordinator in Ukraine. It could "tip the scale", he warned, "for further mass movement, both inside the country and outside". With Russia's full-scale invasion approaching the 1,000-day mark, 3.7 million people have already been displaced inside Ukraine and around 6.7 million have fled as refugees, according to UN figures. The war has killed more than 12,000 people and left nearly 40 percent of the population in need of humanitarian aid, UN data shows. Ukraine is now bracing for its most difficult winter of the war yet. Russia has already destroyed 65 percent of its energy production capacity. In the first two winters of the war, millions of Ukrainians endured regular blackouts and periods of biting cold with no heating. Schmale told reporters in Geneva the situation was worse this year. While temperatures this year are not expected to fall as low as last winter "the main worry is the level tion", he said. The situation appears to be "far worse than last winter", he said. "It's a race against time." Schmale voiced concern about the impact that drawnout power cuts could have on the large number of people living in city tower blocks. "You can evidently not deliver a tonne of solid fuel to the high-rise buildings" if the power grid fails, he said. There were shelters where people can go to have a warm meal and take a warm shower, he said, "but that of course is not enough". Schmale was in Geneva to appeal, among other things, for more funds towards a $500-million winter response plan for Ukraine, which is currently just halfway funded. "We've so far reached about half of the 1.7 million people we were intending ... to reach," he said. So far this year, the UN has provided 7.2 million people in Ukraine with at least one type of humanitarian aid, he said. It has received $1.8 billion in funds of the more than $3.0 billion requested. The funding "trend is clearly downwards" since the first year of the war, when more than $4.0 billion was received, Schmale said.-DNA

TORONTO: From the ground floor of a low-income apartment building in Toronto, Sultana Jahangir runs an organization that helps South Asian woman get established in Canada - a challenge she said is getting harder. Polling and migration experts tell a consistent story: broad support for immigration that prevailed for decades in Canada has cracked following a three-year immigrant-fueled population surge. Jahangir's South Asian Women's Rights Organization, which operates out of two apartments packed with desk chairs and tables, equips women with vocabulary for job interviews, basic computer training and other skills. A social worker born in Bangladesh who came to Toronto in 2005 via the United States, Jahangir said settling in Canada was never easy – but things have "definitely" gotten worse. "You're seeing more fierce and negative competition between immigrants and more negative feelings towards people who may be new versus people who have been here for a long time," she said. Daniel Bernhard, chief executive of the Institute for Canadian Citizenship, said while Canadians are turning against immigration, many still view immigrants who are already here positively. It's an important distinction, he argued, but one he fears is fragile. "The consensus for the last 30 years was rock solid," Bernhard told AFP. 'Too much immigration' In a 2019 Gallup poll that assessed support for immigration in 145 countries, Canada ranked first, with 94 percent of respondents describing migrants moving to the country as a good thing. Five years later, a September survey from the Environics Institute found that "for the first time in a quarter century, a clear majority of Canadians say there is too much immigration." "We're not at Brexit and 'Stop the boats' and 'Build the wall' but we're 10 years behind that," Bernhard said, referring to Britain and the United States. Canada may have so far avoided the inflammatory rhetoric and baseless claims about immigrants that partly drove Donald Trump's presidential campaign, but Bernhard argued 'that tends to be the next step." Canada is "waking up to the fact that, actually, we are just like everybody else," he added, referring to global anti-migrant sentiment.-Agencies

Iran's UN envoy to defuse tensions

NEW YORK: Elon Musk, tech billionaire and adviser to US President-elect Don ald Trump, reportedly met with Iran's ambassador to the United Nations, Amir Saeid Iravani, on Monday, New York Times reported. The New York Times, citing two Iranian officials, reported that Musk and Iravani's hour-long meeting, held at a secret location in New York, centred on defusing tensions between Iran and the United States. Neither Musk nor Trump's transition team has commented on the reported meeting, and Iran's mission to the United Nations also declined to respond. Biden administration officials at the UN were not informed about the meeting and have not received independent confirmation of its occurrence, a US official told CNN. The timing of the reported meeting, just after Trump's electoral victory, has drawn the attention of experts who warn that Trump's return could revive the "maximum pressure" campaign. Analysts note that during Trump's first term his administration imposed sanctions that significantly impacted Iran's economy. Under Trump, US policy included sanctions target ing Iran's oil exports, financial systems, and extensive support for militant groups across the Middle East. Since Trump left office, Iran has ramped up its uranium enrichment, raised oil exports, increased support to regional militias, and even carried out direct strikes on Israel on two occasions. With Trump's impending return to office, the trajectory of US Iran relations remains uncertain, though some suggest Musk's involvement may hint at a diplomatic approach within the new administration. Moreover, Musk's meet ing with Iravani has raised questions about his future influence on US foreign policy as a top Trump adviser. Last week, Musk participated in a call between Trump and Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, where he was reportedly thanked by Zelensky for his support in providing Starlink communication services for Ukraine's war industry vis-a-viz socio-economic development and growth. The delegation of APTMA included Aamir Fayyaz Sheikh, Chairperson Textile Council (Kohinoor Mills), Anees Khawaja (Mahmood Group), Rahim Nasir (Ayesha Group), Naveed Ahmad (Indus Dyeing), Naveed Gulzar (Crescent Mills), Asad Shafi (Cross Stitch), Ali Ahsan (Ashiana Cotton), Shahid Sattar (Executive Director, APTMA), and Raza Baqir (Secretary General, APTMA North). Kamran Arshad outlined the critical challenges facing the textiles and apparel sector and their implications, including potential disconnection of gas supplies to industrial captive power plants, high electricity prices, high taxes and liquidity crunch which may erode the industry's competitiveness and adversely impact exports. The representatives of APTMA also raised their concerns on withdrawal of sales tax exemption on local procurement for exporters under Export Facilitation Scheme (EFS) of Federal Board of Revenue, introduced in the Finance Act 2024. They explained that, while imports of the same inputs remain tax-free, locally procured materials are now subject to 18 percent sales tax. Delays in refunding these taxes through the FASTER system have further strained exporters, pushing them toward imports and jeopardizing the domestic supply chain. Arshad urged the government to renegotiate its commitment to the International Monetary Fund and reconsider the decision of cutting off captive gas supply by end of January 2025 so that sector could be able to regain the lost grounds and enhance exports. Federal Minister Jam Kamal Khan reaffirmed the government's support, recognizing the textiles and apparel sector a cornerstone of Pakistan's exports and economy. "The textiles and apparel industry is the established sector, and government will extend maximum support for its sustainability and growth," he stated. The minister expressed optimism about increasing textiles and apparel exports through collaborative efforts and supportive policies. He encouraged to focus on potential in existing markets, explore new markets and diversify more to new value-added finished products. "The Ministry of Commerce is committed to addressing these challenges. I will personally engage with the relevant authorities to find solutions," the minister assured. The meeting concluded with a renewed pledge to facilitate and uplift Pakistan's textiles and apparel industry, a vital driver of exports and employment generation for the masses.

Primary schools empty as smog persists in New Delhi

NEW DELHI: Residents in India's capital New Delhi again woke under a blanket of choking smog on Friday, a day after authorities closed primary schools and imposed measures aimed at alleviating the annual crisis. Delhi and the surrounding metropolitan area, home to more than 30 million people, consistently tops world rankings for air pollution in winter. The smog is blamed for thousands of premature deaths each year and is an annual source of misery for residents, with various piecemeal government initiatives failing to measurably address the problem. All primary schools were shut by government order on Thursday night with young pupils - particularly vulnerable to smog-related ailments due to their age - instead moving to online lessons. "I have an eight-year-old kid and he has been suffering from a cough the past couple of days," Delhi resident Satraj, who did not give his surname, said on the streets of the capital. "The government did the right thing by shutting down schools. Thursday's edict also banned construction work, ordered drivers of older diesel-powered vehicles to stay off the streets and directed water trucks to spray roads in a bid to clear dust particles from the air. Delhi's air quality nonetheless deteriorated to "hazardous" levels for the fourth consecutive day this week, according to monitoring firm IQAir. Lebanon losses top $5b: WB

BEIRUT: More than a year of clashes that recently escalated into war have cost Lebanon more than $5 billion in economic losses, with actual structural damage amounting to billions more, the World Bank said on Thursday. Since September 23, Israel has ramped up its air invasion in Lebanon, later sending in ground troops following almost a year of limited, cross-border exchanges initiated by Hezbollah over the Gaza war. Lebanon's health ministry said at least three people were killed on Thursday in an Israeli attack on the main eastern city of Baalbek. Intensified strikes blamed on Israel have also hit Hezbollah ally Syria, where the defence ministry said 15 people were killed Thursday. In its Lebanon report, the World Bank provided estimates for damage between October 8, 2023 and October 27, 2024, saying "the conflict has caused $5.1 billion in economic losses", with damage to physical structures amounting to "at least $3.4 billion" on top of that.-APP

Paris sees historic low attendance for France vs Israel football match

PARIS: The UEFA Nations League football match between France and Israel at the Stade de France saw a historic low attendance, with only 16,611 spectators in the stands. The match was overshadowed by brief clashes in the crowd as Israel's national anthem was met with loud booing. In response, security was tightened, with around 4,000 police officers and 1,600 security personnel deployed around the stadium, including riot police stationed on-site. Despite the heavy security presence and the pre-match tensions, the game, which was attended by French President Emmanuel Macron and Prime Minister Michel Barnier, concluded without major incidents of violence. The low turnout came just days after pro-Palestinian protests in Amsterdam led to clashes, and the event saw only a small number of Israeli fans in attendance. Around 100 Israeli fans defied government advice against travel and were seated in a corner of the 80,000-capacity stadium. During the game, they held yellow balloons and chanted, "Free the Hostages," in a reference to Israelis held by Hamas in Gaza. Approximately two kilometres from the stadium, a pro-Palestinian protest outside the Front Populaire Métro station in St-Denis drew several hundred demonstrators. The group marched towards the stadium but was dispersed by riot police. Éric Coquerel, an MP from the left-wing France Unbowed party, criticised the government's approach to the event. "We are living in a schizophrenic moment," he said. "On the one hand, international institutions recognise the existence of a genocide in Gaza. On the other, we have a French government that reluctantly agrees to call for a ceasefire. Coquerel argued that Macron's attendance at the match sent a signal to Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, allowing further military action in Gaza. "France is looking the other way," he said, questioning if Macron would attend a match between France and Russia under similar circumstances.-DNA

Tarar calls for culture driven climate actions

Highlighting Pakistan's meager contribution to the global carbon emission, he said that his country was among the top ten countries that was most vulnerable to the climate change

News Desk

BAKU: Federal Minister for Information, Broadcasting, National Heritage and Culture Attaullah Tarar on Friday made a passionate call for taking culture driven climate action to address the global climate crises. While delivering a speech at a high-level ministerial dialogue on the Cultural Heritage and Climate Change in Baku, the minister began his speech with a heartfelt commendation to Azerbaijan, the UAE and Brazil for bringing all the nations together for the second high-level dialogue on culture based climate action. "Here in Baku, a city that breathes history and radiates cultural vibrancy, we find ourselves surrounded by the reminders of the strengths and resilience that heritage brings to our lives," he said while describing the city as "a testament to what a culture can achieve. It preserves the past, shape the present and guides us towards more resilient future," he added. The minister remarked, as I reflects upon the legacies like Baku, I reminded of the cultural gems back home in Pakistan where the people of Indus civilization which originated along the banks and tributaries of the mighty river Indus which is also a home to one of the world UNESCO heritage sites Mohenjo Daro which dates back to 2500 BC. He said, "today, as we convene here to discuss about how we channel these values, our ingenuity, creativity and resilience to address one of the greatest challenges of our times, the global climate crises, the communities, across the world, are feeling the devastating impacts of climate change.

Highlighting Pakistan's meager contribution to the global carbon emission, he said that his country was among the top ten countries that was most vulnerable to the climate change which not only posed great threat to the lives and livelihoods but also culture and national heritage.

"In 2022, we were faced with most devastated floods. Thousands of people including indigenous people were displaced, and when we come to calculate loss and damage we were caused a damage of 13 billion USD," he noted. He said the world is not only facing the risk of losing lives and livelihoods but also "irreplaceable tradition, knowledge and size that define who we are". "If we hope to alter this discourse, we must unite to bring forth our most innovative and inclusive ideas," he remarked. As representatives of culture in our nation, he said all the nations hold the responsibility to advocate for the role of culture in driving climate action. "In Pakistan, we understand that climate action must also mean protecting our culture heritage and integrating cultural perspective into adaptation efforts," he said, adding "we see this not only as an obligation to preserve our past, but also an opportunity to build a sustainable future that respects and includes all voices." The information minister said culture based solution could help the world adapt immediate impact of climate change while equipping with resilience to face future challenges. "Our efforts must be all encompassing and inclusive and we must ensure that culture based climate actions are embedded in our policies, just as climate consideration must be woven in our culture sector," he stressed.

Atta Tarar believed that the role of culture in addressing climate changes often remained underappreciated. Pakistan is committed to this approach, he said, adding "in our national adaptation communication, we highlighted the essential role that cultural heritage plays in strengthening community, identity and wellbeing and resilience.' "Protecting cultural heritage not only honors our past but enhance stability and prosperity in changing climate," said the minister who was encouraged by the growing consensus cross the global community that cultural heritage and indigenous knowledge and resilience of traditional practices are powerful tools in our climate action toolkit. He said "the culture is not only an inheritance from past rather it is living breathing force that shapes our present and empower us to create a better future". Through culture, he said resilience, innovation and solidarity are needed to confront the climate crises. "In our commitment to culture and resillence, we can lead by example showing the world the heritage and traditions we cherished are not just reminders where we have been, but beacons guiding us where we can and must go together," the minister stated. In conclusion, the minister cited the saying of the Holy Prophet (SAW) that says: "if the final hour comes while you have a sapling in your hand, you should plant it".

of schools' closure for another week in affected regions

LAHORE: The worsening smog situation in Punjab has led the government to declare a health emergency in Lahore and Multan, the two worst-hit cities, as authorities continue efforts to curb air pollution and its impact on public health.

IQAir, a Swiss air quality technology company. The prevailing smog situation has warranted strict measures, including school closures and shifting towards online classes and a ban on most outdoor activities till November 17, in eight districts engulfed by toxic air. In addition to this, dining in restaurants, shops, markets and shopping malls had been directed to close by 8pm. However, the persistent thick smog has prompted the extension of school closures and a declaration of health emergency. Marriyum also announced new operating hours for the restaurants in Lahore and Multan, allowing them to stay open until 4pm and offer only takeaway service till 8pm. "A full lockdown will be enforced in both cities on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, as authorities continue to monitor the worsening smog situation," the minister stated, adding that the government will review data until Wednesday before making further decisions. She further stated that the government is also imposing a ban on construction activities in the two cities from this Saturday until next Sunday to reduce further pollution. Israel's warfare in Gaza consistent with genocide

FOREIGN DESK

NEW YORK: Israel's methods of warfare in Gaza, including the use of starvation as a weapon, mass civilian casualties and life-threatening conditions deliberately inflicted on Palestinians in the territory, are consistent with the characteristics of genocide, the UN Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices said in a report published on Thursday. "Since the beginning of the war, Israeli officials have publicly supported policies that strip Palestinians of the very necessities required to sustain life: food, water and fuel," the committee said. Statements from Israeli authorities and the "systematic and unlawful" blocking of humanitarian aid deliveries to Gaza make clear "Israel's intent to instrumentalize life-saving supplies for political and military gains," it added. The committee, the full title of which is the UN Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian people and other Arabs of the Occupied Territories, was established by the UN General Assembly in 1968 to monitor the human rights situation in the occupied Golan heights, the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and the Gaza Strip. It comprises the permanent representatives to the UN from three member states, currently Malaysia, Senegal and Sri Lanka, who are appointed by the president of the General Assembly. Its latest report, which covers the period from October 2023 to July 2024, mostly focuses on the effects of the war in Gaza on the rights of Palestinians. "Through its siege over Gaza, obstruction of humanitarian aid, alongside targeted attacks and killing of civilians and aid workers, despite repeated UN appeals, binding orders from the International Court of Justice and resolutions of the Security Council, Israel is intentionally causing death, starvation and serious injury, using starvation as a method of war and inflicting collective punishment on the Palestinian population," the committee said. The "extensive" Israeli bombing campaign has wiped out essential services in Gaza and caused an "environmental catastrophe" that will have "lasting health impacts," it adds.

RAWALPINDI: Incarcerated Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf (PTI) founder Imran Khan has categorically rejected media reports claiming former first lady Bushra Bibi formally joined politics, said party lawyer Faisal Chaudhry on Friday. The clarification came after media reports claimed that the former first lady issued instructions to the PTI leadership across the country yesterday and summoned a meeting of the PTI leadership this evening. "Bushra Bibi did not take central leadership of the party into confidence in this regard," the sources said. Talking to journalists after meeting the party's founder in Adiala Jail today, Advocate Faisal Chaudhry said: "Bushra Bibi conveyed PTI founder's message to the party leaders." "She is neither joining pol-itics nor will she in future," the advocate clarified while quoting Khan. Referring to the "restrictions" on meetings between Khan and the party leadership, his counsel said: "When such a situation is created [by the government], message will be sent through someone." Responding to another question, the PTI counsel said that the chairman of the anti-graft watchdog and the investigation officer should tender resignations after the statement issued by the NAB. He said that the PTI founder was being tried in a "fake case". The speculations regarding Bushra Bibi's entry into active politics triggered after she was released from prison last month on bail in new Toshakhana case related to illegal sale of expensive state gifts. A day earlier, the NAB pleaded with the Islamabad High Court (IHC) to set aside the conviction of the PTI founder and his wife in the first Toshakhana reference and remand the matter back to the accountability court for a retrial.

to reach consensus on new restrictions, according to an August report by Euractiv, which cited diplomatic sources. – Agencies
