BriefsBNP claims victory in Bangladesh elections*NEWS DESK

DHAKA: Counting was under way on Thursday in Bangladesh's first election since a deadly 2024 uprising and the subsequent student-led revolution, with powerful political heir Tariq Rahman bullish about defeating a coalition. BNP has claimed victory in elections however the election commission has not made final announcement.

The 60-year-old said he was "confident" his Bangladesh Nationalist Party (BNP) — which was crushed during the 15 years of ousted premier Sheikh Hasina's autocratic rule — can regain power in the South Asian nation of 170 million people. However, he faces a stiff challenge from a coalition led by Jamaat-i-Islami.

Election Commission officials reported "a few minor disruptions" but top party leaders on both sides raised fears of threats, with the BNP's Rahman calling on people to vote so that "conspiracies will not succeed".

Canada police say 18-year-old carried out mass shooting

TUMBLER RIDGE: Canadian police said Wednesday an 18-year-old carried out a mass shooting in a remote mining town, killing six people at a local school, after slaying her mother and stepbrother. Police commander Dwayne McDonald said authorities still don't know the motive in Tuesday's mass shooting in Tumbler Ridge, but the shooter — who took her own life — was known to have mental health issues. McDonald identified the shooter as Jesse Van Rootselaar, a transgender woman who was born biologically male and dropped out of the targeted high school four years ago. McDonald revised the toll down to eight from nine, due to earlier confusion over the condition of one of the victims. Officers who entered the town's high school found six people dead — a 39-year-old woman teacher and five students — three 12-year-old girls and two boys, aged 13 and 12.

India crush Namibia by 93 runs

NEW DELHI: Varun Chakravarthy and Axar Patel delivered fiery spells to steer India to a convincing 93-run victory over Namibia in the 18th group-stage match of the ICC Men's T20 World Cup 2026 at Arun Jaitley Stadium, Delhi, on Thursday. Half-centuries from Ishan Kishan and Hardik Pandya, followed by a collective bowling effort, led defending champions India to a resounding victory today. Set to chase a daunting 210-run target, Namibia could muster 116 runs before getting bowled out in 18.2 overs despite a spirited start. The Eagles were 67/1 after seven overs, but Louren Steenkamp's dismissal on the first delivery of the successive overs derailed their run chase as it triggered a match-defining collapse, which saw them lose their remaining eight wickets for 49 runs.

Historic Milestone for Kalash Community

KP cabinet approves Kalash Marriage Bill

PESHAWAR: In a landmark decision, KP government has approved the Kalash Marriage Bill, marking the first time in Pakistan's history that a dedicated family law has been enacted to recognize and protect the personal law of an indigenous community. According to a press release issued here on Thursday, the bill establishes formal legal recognition of Kalash marriages, introduces a structured, culturally respectful marriage registration system, and safeguards the Kalash people's unique cultural and religious identity. This bill was a joint effort of Faith Friends and Blue Veins, with the support of NCA, and was initiated by Mr Wazir Zada, a community leader of the Kalash Community. The Kalash community, residing in the valleys of Bumburet, Rumbur, and Birir in Chitral, has preserved its ancient Indo-Aryan heritage, polytheistic faith, distinct language, and vibrant traditions for centuries. Despite their rich cultural legacy, the community lacked a formal legal framework to regulate and protect family and marital rights. The newly approved legislation addresses a longstanding legal gap and represents a significant step toward inclusion, dignity, and justice. Qamar Naseem, Program Manager, Blue Veins and Drafter of the bill, said, "The approval of the Kalash Marriage Bill is a historic recognition of Pakistan's indigenous diversity. For the first time, the state has formally acknowledged and protected the family laws of the Kalash community in a way that respects their faith, customs, and identity. This law strengthens constitutional guarantees of equality and minority rights and sets an important precedent for inclusive legislation." Mr Rizwan, representative of the National Commission for Human Rights (NCHR), remarked: "This legislation is a significant advancement in protecting the human rights of one of Pakistan's most unique indigenous communities. Legal recognition of Kalash marriages ensures access to documentation, inheritance protections, and social safeguards while honoring cultural autonomy. It is a model of rights-based and culturally sensitive lawmaking." This landmark development signals Pakistan's growing commitment to protecting minority rights and celebrating the country's pluralistic heritage. The Kalash Marriage Bill stands as a testament to collaborative governance and a shared commitment to justice, dignity, and cultural preservation. Blue Veins and Faith Friends extend appreciation to Chief Minister of Khyber Pakhtunkhwa; the Chief Secretary; Minister Local Government, Minster Law Department, Mr. Wazirzada, Focal Person to the Chief Minister on Minority Affairs; honorable Qazis from the Kalash Community, Current and Ex officials of Local Government Department, the National Commission for Human Rights; the Directorate of Human Rights (DKP-DHR); Law Department; the Minister for Law; the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Commission on the Status of Women and all other who supported. On the directives of Chief Minister Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Muhammad Sohail Afridi, the provincial cabinet has approved the Ramazan Relief Package during its 47th meeting to provide financial assistance to deserving families across the province. According to the approved package, 1,063 million families will receive cash assistance at an average rate of Rs 12,500 per family during the holy month of Ramazan. APP

KARACHI: The Consul General of the Islamic Republic of Iran in Karachi, Akbar Eissa Zadeh, reaffirmed Iran's commitment to sovereignty, regional peace, and strengthened ties with Pakistan while addressing a ceremony marking the 47th anniversary of the Islamic Revolution. Iran Welcoming distinguished guests on Wednesday, including Sindh Governor Kamran Khan Tessori, senior officials of the Sindh government, members of the diplomatic corps, and representatives from political and economic sectors, the Consul General described the Islamic Revolution as a living testament to the determination, resilience, and steadfastness of the Iranian nation. He stated that despite rapidly changing regional dynamics over the past five decades, Iran has achieved significant progress in various sectors by relying on indigenous capabilities, social cohesion, and sustainable human resources. He noted advancements in science, technology, and healthcare, adding that Iran continues to move forward economically despite what he termed as "unjust sanctions" and global economic pressures imposed by major powers. The Consul General highlighted growth in non-oil exports and said Iran has attained self-sufficiency in infrastructure development, healthcare services, pharmaceutical production, housing projects, provision of clean drinking water, and communications. These developments, he said, have improved the quality of life for ordinary citizens. Referring to recent developments, he said the past year had been marked by challenges. He also addressed the recent protests in Iran, which began on January 7, 2026, citing economic concerns. According to him, peaceful demonstrations were later infiltrated by "foreign-backed terrorist elements," turning them into armed unrest. He said members of Iran's security forces were martyred or injured during the violence. He maintained that while peaceful protest is a right of citizens, the government exercised restraint while ensuring national security and ultimately thwarted attempts to destabilize the country. Describing Iran as a responsible, independent, and influential country in the region and beyond, he said Tehran supports dialogue and cooperation to ensure peace, stability, and sustainable development. He highlighted Iran's balanced foreign policy, active diplomacy, and expanding engagement with neighboring countries, emerging powers, and key regional and international organizations. Turning to Pakistan, the Consul General termed it a "brotherly country" with a rich history, shared religion, and cultural ties.

He said Iran-Pakistan relations span centuries and hold a special place in the hearts of the Iranian people. He noted growing momentum in bilateral relations in recent years, particularly in economic, political, and cultural cooperation. He remarked that relations between the two countries have entered a new phase, describing them as more than state-to-state ties but rather a bond between two nations and civilizations rooted in shared history and a common commitment to peace and lasting prosperity. He also acknowledged the important role of Sindh province in strengthening bilateral relations, thanking its people for their contribution. He expressed optimism that Memorandums of Understanding signed between Sindh and various Iranian provinces would enhance economic, technical, and cultural cooperation, creating new opportunities in trade, investment, and tourism.

Kundi calls for stronger Parliamentary role to combat terrorism

ISLAMABAD: Governor of Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, Faisal Karim Kundi, on Thursday underscored the urgent need to strengthen parliamentary oversight, enhance institutional capacity, and enact robust legislation to effectively combat terrorism and counter terrorist financing (CFT) in Pakistan. He stressed that defeating terrorism requires not only security measures but also a coordinated national strategy rooted in legislative strength and institutional resilience. Governor Kundi was addressing a national dialogue-based workshop titled "Enhancing Parliamentary Oversight and Institutional Capacities for Counter Terrorism (CT) and Countering Terrorist Financing (CFT)", organized by the Sustainable Social Development Organization (SSDO) in Islamabad. Serving as the chief guest, he lauded SSDO for arranging what he termed a "timely and purposeful" platform for dialogue addressing the evolving security landscape in the country. "These platforms are not just formal events—they create space for collective reflection, national harmony, and informed policymaking," he said, adding that Pakistan continues to face significant threats to peace, social cohesion, and economic stability. The Governor noted that while Pakistan has achieved major gains through extensive security operations and institutional reforms, the resurgence of terrorism in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa highlights the need for renewed vigilance and strategic adaptation. He emphasized that dismantling extremist structures requires a multi-pronged approach, including the elimination of terrorists' digital communication networks and blocking their financial channels. The Psychodynamics of his rise and fall: Bhutto

Rise & fall of Pakistan's first democratically elected PM seen through 'psychological' lens

STAFF REPORTER

ISLAMABAD: Pakistan's first democratically elected Prime Minister, Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, remains one of the most written-about and debated figures in the country's political history. Statesman, populist leader, reformer, and controversial prime minister—Bhutto's life has been examined from political, social, and historical perspectives for decades. At a 'Meet the Author/Book Review' session organized jointly by the Perveen Shakir Trust (PST) and The Islamabad Club the speakers sought to explore a different dimension of Bhutto's personality: the psychological forces behind his meteoric rise and tragic downfall. Former Chairman of the Central Board of Revenue, Shamim Ahmad book 'Bhutto: The Psychodynamics of His Rise and Fall' was discussed at length. The discussion triggered a lively and thought-provoking debate among scholars, writers, and former bureaucrats. The gathering was notable for what PST Chairperson Mrs. Parveen Qadir Agha, moderator Khawar Ahmed, Mrs. Agha herself, and PST Secretary General Raama Seer at all share backgrounds in the service, adding a distinctive bureaucratic perspective to the literary evening. Former PPP Senator Farhatullah Babar delivered the keynote address.

ISLAMABAD: PPP ex-Senator Farhatullah Babar speaking at a ceremony 'Meet the Author/Book Review' held to discuss former Chairman FBR Shamim Ahmad's book "Bhutto: The Psychodynamics of His Rise and Fall" organized jointly by the Perveen Shakir Trust and the Islamabad Club at the Islamabad Club.

while Prof. Dr. Nazia Iqbal from the Department of Psychology at the International Islamic University Islamabad (IIUI) critically examined whether the author had successfully done justice to such a complex subject through a psychodynamic lens. She described the book as a serious attempt at psycho-analyzing Bhutto, beginning with the foundations of his personality—his early heroes, intellectual influences, literary preferences, and formative experiences. She observed that the book reminds readers that leadership is not merely political but deeply psychological. However, she pointed out that the author identifies several psychological traits that may have contributed to Bhutto's eventual downfall: flawed judgment, impulsive decision-making, manic and hypermanic tendencies, towering ambition, fragile ego, and occasional recklessness. According to the book, Bhutto may have been vulnerable to extreme mood swings and overwhelming political ambition, with the author even suggesting the possibility of bipolar tendencies. "The central question this book leaves us with," Dr Nazia remarked, "is whether our political system is capable of protecting leaders from their own psychological vulnerabilities." Farhatullah Babar welcomed the publication, saying that a good book is one that stimulates meaningful dialogue—something this work had clearly achieved. Though originally written in 2019, he noted, the book remains relevant due to its unusual and compelling approach. Babar appreciated the Perveen Shakir Trust for organizing a thoughtful discussion on one of Pakistan's most admired and controversial leaders. However, he expressed reservations about attributing Bhutto's success primarily to internal psychological dynamics. Citing Dr. Mubashar Hassan—a founding member of the Pakistan People's Party—Babar argued that external political forces and historical circumstances played a decisive role in shaping Bhutto's ascent. He nonetheless described the book as informative, rich in detail and intellectually engaging. Babar also suggested that the author clarify a section listing individuals "assassinated during Bhutto's time," noting that without explanation it could create unintended impressions.

Pakistan assures BAT of reforms to curb Illicit tobacco trade

He emphasized the importance of enhancing export competitiveness and facilitating sectors with strong export potential, including tobacco and related value-added products

ISLAMABAD: Federal Minister for Finance and Revenue, Senator Muhammad Aurangzeb, held a meeting at the Finance Division with a delegation of British American Tobacco (BAT) led by Ms. Pascale Muelermester, Regional Director, Asia Pacific, Middle East & Africa, along with senior executive members of British American Tobacco (BAT) and Pakistan Tobacco Company (PTC). In his opening remarks, the Finance Minister underscored that Pakistan's ongoing structural reform agenda, undertaken under the leadership of the Prime Minister, is aimed at breaking the historical boom-and-bust cycles through fiscal discipline, broadening of the tax base, and strengthened enforcement and compliance. He emphasized that fiscal sustainability requires equitable taxation, improved compliance across all sectors, and decisive action to curb leakages and illicit activity. Highlighting progress on tax administration reforms, he noted that the Government's tax transformation, anchored in reforms to people, processes, and technology, has strengthened enforcement mechanisms through AI-led CRM systems, AI-led production monitoring, and track-and-trace initiatives. He shared that enhanced enforcement across sectors including sugar, cement, tobacco, textiles, and beverages has resulted in measurable improvements in compliance and revenue collection. The delegation was briefed on ongoing enforcement actions against illicit cigarette manufacturing and smuggling. It was shared that record seizures have been made during the current year, with coordinated operations involving customs, inland revenue, provincial authorities, and dedicated enforcement units to curb the illegal trade of both finished products and raw materials. The BAT delegation appreciated the Government's enforcement efforts and raised concerns regarding excise stability, the widening price differential between formal and illicit products, and the export competitiveness of Pakistani tobacco. The delegation emphasized that policy predictability and a stable excise regime would support formal sector growth, strengthen revenue generation, and enable long-term investment planning. The delegation also highlighted export opportunities, particularly in the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia and other international markets, and underscored the importance of competitive crop pricing and regulatory alignment to enable Pakistan to expand its footprint in global tobacco exports. Responding to these concerns, the Finance Minister noted that sectoral reviews are underway to assess policy measures and address anomalies where required, while ensuring alignment with broader fiscal objectives. He reiterated that revenue mobilization remains critical for fiscal stability; however, the Government remains open to constructive engagement to ensure policies are effective and sustainable. On the macroeconomic front, the Minister highlighted significant progress over the past two years, including improved fiscal indicators, declining inflation, strengthened foreign exchange reserves, and enhanced external stability.—DNA

Kashmir's right to self-determination anchored in int'l law: Masood

ISLAMABAD: Former President of Azad Jammu and Kashmir and former Ambassador of Pakistan to the United States, China, and the United Nations, Mian Masood Khan said here Thursday that Kashmir's right to self-determination was firmly anchored in international law, moral legitimacy, and historical justice "Pakistan will continue to advocate this cause with full conviction and strategic restraint," Khan said while addressing students and faculty members at the National University of Computer and Emerging Sciences (FAST). Speaking on the theme "Kashmir in International Law and Pakistan's Strategic Narrative," Khan stated that the Kashmir freedom movement predates 1947 and has historical roots extending over two centuries. He traced the origins of Kashmiri resistance to oppressive regimes beginning in the mid-eighteenth century and elaborated on successive phases of political repression, economic exploitation, and denial of fundamental rights faced by the people of Jammu and Kashmir Khan emphasized that the people of Jammu and Kashmir possess an inherent and inalienable right to self-determination, rooted in both modern international law and universal principles of justice. He explained that the Indian Independence Act of 1947 provided princely states with the legal basis to determine their future based on geographical contiguity and demographic composition, both of which supported Jammu and Kashmir's natural alignment with Pakistan. Highlighting the legal dimension, Ambassador Khan noted that multiple United Nations Security Council resolutions reaffirm the Kashmiri people's right to determine their political future through a free and impartial plebiscite. He described this right as a peremptory norm of international law that cannot be overridden unilaterally. Ambassador Khan underscored that Pakistan's constitutional and diplomatic stance consistently prioritizes the will of the Kashmiri people before determining any future political arrangement. He added that Pakistan's strategic narrative is based on international legality, moral consistency.—APP

Gwadar's water system gets major reset

ISLAMABAD: In a move aimed at streamlining the supply of water in the coastal city of Gwadar, the Gwadar Development Authority (GDA) announced a new administrative framework, dividing the port city into two zones and establishing a dedicated water section within the authority. The decision was taken under the leadership of GDA Director General Moin-ur-Rehman Khan as part of efforts to ensure more efficient distribution, monitoring and regulation of water resources in the coastal city, according to a Gwadar Pro's report on Thursday. Under the new arrangement, Gwadar has been divided into North and South zones. The North Zone will cover Old Town areas, while the South Zone will include areas from Shambay Ismail Ward to Dhor Ghatti. An executive engineer, Muhammad Akbar, has been appointed as overall in-charge of water distribution across the city, with separate officers and field staff deployed in both zones. He will be assisted by Assistant Engineer Qamar Baloch and engineers Kamran and Sanaullah. The entire system will operate under the supervision of the GDA chief engineer. Officials said a formal water section has now been established within GDA to centralize operations related to water transmission, distribution, quality control and monitoring under a coordinated system. In addition, GDA has initiated steps to introduce a billing system for new water connections. The registration of consumers is underway, and residents whose records are not yet available have been directed to submit their details. Pak reaffirms commitment to rural transformation at IFAD Council

DNA

ISLAMABAD: Minister for National Food Security and Research, Rana Tanveer Hussain on Thursday reaffirmed commitment to rural transformation in order to promote agriculture sector for the development of local economy as well as to attain social prosperity in the country. The minister is on an official visit to Rome where he is leading Pakistan's delegation at the 49th Session of the Governing Council of the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD). The session brought together ministers, development partners, financial institutions, private sector representatives and youth entrepreneurs to deliberate on rural transformation, sustainable agriculture and innovative financing for smallholder communities. On the sidelines of the Governing Council, the Minister held a detailed bilateral meeting with IFAD President Alvaro Lario, said a press release received here today. The discussions centered on the progress of IFAD-funded projects in Pakistan, future areas of cooperation and Pakistan's continued engagement in IFAD's replenishment cycles. Rana Tanveer Hussain reaffirmed Pakistan's firm commitment to strengthening its long-standing partnership with IFAD and extended a formal invitation to the President to undertake an official visit to Pakistan. President Lario fondly recalled the signing of the bilateral Home Country Agreement in July 2023 and the subsequent establishment of IFAD's Home Country Office in Islamabad later that year. He appreciated Pakistan's historic role as a founding member of IFAD and conveyed his interest in visiting Islamabad in the near future to further deepen collaboration. The meeting also reviewed Pakistan's expanding portfolio with IFAD, which now exceeds $1.2 billion. Both sides expressed satisfaction over the steady implementation of projects under the current country strategy, which focuses on rural development, poverty reduction, food security and climate resilience across all provinces. The Minister noted that IFAD-supported initiatives are reaching some of the country's most remote and underserved areas, including Gilgit-Baltistan, Balochistan, South Punjab and other marginalized regions. During his engagements, Rana Tanveer Hussain also welcomed the forthcoming visit of IFAD Executive Vice President Mr. Donal Brown, expected in March. Mr. Brown recalled his previous interactions with Pakistani leadership and expressed his intention to continue close coordination with Pakistan on future development initiatives. At the high-level roundtable marking ten years of the International Day of Family Remittances, the Minister highlighted Pakistan's position among leading remittance-receiving countries. He emphasized that the Government's efforts to promote financial inclusion and channel remittance flows into productive sectors, particularly agriculture and small and medium enterprises. Speaking at a thematic session on investing in young entrepreneurs, he underscored the importance of connecting farmers to markets and creating opportunities for rural youth through value chain development and agribusiness support. Pakistan's partnership with IFAD dates back to 1978. Over the decades, the Fund has financed 26 projects and programmes in the country with a cumulative portfolio of over $ 2.3 billion, including government and co-financing contributions. At present, four major projects are under implementation, aimed at enhancing agricultural productivity, supporting women through asset transfers and livelihood schemes, expanding irrigation and market access in mountainous areas, and graduating vulnerable households out of poverty through integrated support programmes.

The Minister observed that IFAD's community-driven model has been particularly effective in empowering rural women, strengthening smallholder farming systems and promoting climate-smart agriculture.

FGP holds high-level meeting

ISLAMABAD: Freedom Gate Prosperity (FGP) convened a high-level meeting with Dr. Sayad Parastar, a renowned agricultural scientist and Chairman of Henan Pallas Biotechnology Co. Ltd., to explore potential collaboration aimed at improving soil health and boosting agricultural productivity in Pakistan, particularly in climate-stressed and degraded regions. The meeting was held at the FGP office, according to a press release issued here on Thursday. Discussions focused on sustainable soil restoration approaches to address declining fertility, salinity, nutrient imbalances, and long-term land degradation—factors that are constraining crop yields and affecting farmers' livelihoods across large parts of the country. The meeting was attended by Sarmad Hussain, a Pakistani-German scholar; Shafqat Aziz; Dr. Shahbaz Tariq; Dr. Kausar Khan; Atif Saeed of FGP; and Mr. Asad Rafi, CEO of Micronox. Participants described the engagement as a forward-looking step toward structured cooperation, including technical exchanges and potential pilot initiatives. During the session, Dr. Parastar shared international experiences related to soil rehabilitation practices, including the use of S8 (octasulfur)-based applications as one component of a broader soil improvement strategy. He presented insights from arid and salt-affected regions where such approaches have reportedly contributed to improved soil conditions and enhanced crop performance over time. He emphasized that the primary focus should remain on sustainable soil restoration rather than short-term yield gains. Leading the discussion, Muhammad Anwar, CEO of FGP, highlighted the urgency of soil regeneration in the face of climate change, water scarcity, and growing food security challenges. He stressed that restoring soil must be guided by scientific validation, local adaptation, and collaboration with research institutions, government bodies, and farming communities. Sarmad Hussain, who accompanied Dr. Parastar, also contributed to discussions on coordination mechanisms and potential pathways for responsible international cooperation. Both sides described the dialogue as constructive and agreed to move forward in a structured and time-bound manner. In the coming weeks, technical parameters, validation processes, and collaboration modalities will be further examined, including the possibility of pilot demonstrations aligned with Pakistan's agricultural priorities.—DNA

Load-shedding linked to feeder losses

ISLAMABAD: Parliamentary Secretary for Energy (Power Division) Aamir Talal Khan informed the National Assembly on Thursday that load-shedding on certain feeders is primarily linked to high transmission and distribution losses. Responding to a question during the Question Hour, he said feeders experiencing 10 hours or more of load-shedding are mainly those with elevated loss ratios. He noted that the issue has been raised repeatedly in the House and clarified that the duration of load-shedding is directly connected to the level of losses on individual feeders. To address the problem, he said the government is undertaking multiple corrective measures. The entire cable system is being upgraded, with conventional lines being replaced by Aerial Bundled Cables (ABC) to curb theft and reduce losses. In addition, around 1.6 million Advanced Metering Infrastructure (AMI) meters have so far been installed, replacing old meters. He added that by the end of 2026, all three-phase meters across the country would be converted to AMI meters, which would help significantly reduce losses and improve monitoring.—APP

Yemen charting road to peace and security with new government

DR. ABDEL AZIZ ALUWAISHEG

YEMEN turned a new page with the formation of a new government last week. Led by former Foreign Minister Dr. Shaya Al-Zindani, it promised major economic, political and security reforms. Al-Zindani is a veteran diplomat who served in the diplomatic corps of the pre-1990 southern government, then in the unity government post-1990, before he was appointed foreign minister in 2024. As a conciliatory leader who avoids friction and inflammatory rhetoric, he is the man for the moment.

The challenges before the new government are immense. Politically, the main task is to resume the search for a political solution to the Yemen crisis. The UN-mediated talks with the Houthis are at a standstill and need to be jumpstarted. With the dissolution of the Southern Transitional Council, the government has reunited all areas under its authority and is in a good position to lead the negotiations. Yemen needs to strengthen its international support systems. During the eight-year conflict with the Southern Transitional Council, it was nearly paralyzed as the rebel group usurped government authority and pursued its own diplomatic moves. The near-unanimous expressions of support for the new government are a measure of how much the international community is eager for Yemen to resume its rightful place in the region and that it is ready to lend a helping hand.

The Friends of Yemen is one of those support systems. It is a group of 30 major countries that have in the past provided political, economic and security support for Yemen. The G10 group of ambassadors, which grew to become 20 ambassadors from the countries most concerned about Yemen, including the five permanent members of the UN Security Council, provided useful diplomatic coordination. Donors also had their own group to coordinate with the government on aid. These support groups supplemented the work of joint Gulf Cooperation Council-Yemen committees and bilateral relations. As a conciliatory leader who avoids friction and inflammatory rhetoric, Al-Zindani is the man for the moment.

Security is a paramount concern for the new government. Internally, it has to deal with the Houthi military threat. Although there has been a tenuous truce for about four years, the rebel group has broken it with numerous attempts to annex more land. It also poses a serious threat to maritime security and freedom of navigation in the Red Sea, Bab Al-Mandab Strait and Gulf of Aden. The Yemeni government's ability to patrol its territorial waters was hampered by the fragmentation of security forces and the rivalry between them. The situation improved with the Southern Transitional Council's dissolution last month and especially since the government decided to put all armed groups under a unified command in coordination with the Coalition to Restore Legitimacy in Yemen. Yemen could now play a larger role in countering Houthi threats, both internal and in Yemeni waters, but it needs support from the rest of the world.

The third major challenge, after the political and security spheres, is the state of the economy, which has hampered the government's ability to provide basic services and humanitarian assistance to the population. The Southern Transitional Council rebellion against the internationally recognized government in 2017 exacerbated an already fragile economy, which nearly collapsed in 2015 following the Houthi takeover of the capital Sanaa the previous September. To bring the economy back, the government needs security, stability and the resumption of economic activity.

Yemen's gross domestic product contracted by more than 37 percent in three years, from $43 billion in 2014 to about $31 billion in 2016 and $27 billion in 2017, the year the Southern Transitional Council began its rebellion. During its eight-year control of much of the south between 2017 and 2025, the economy shrank to $17 billion. Thus, the Houthi insurgency in the north and the Southern Transitional Council rebellion in the south caused a 58-percent contraction from 2014 levels. To bring the economy back from this unprecedented collapse, the government needs security, stability and the resumption of economic activity. There is significant economic potential but the government needs the help of its friends and partners, especially in restoring economic capacity.

There are at least four areas of potential economic growth that could be maximized through international engagement and cooperation. Oil and gas production can bring in fuel for the needed economic recovery and funds for government expenditure. Restoring farmers' ability to grow crops and export surplus could bring life back to the countryside and improve food security. In the past, Yemen had thriving fisheries for both local consumption and export. Tourism also has some potential, especially specialized and ecotourism.

Realizing the significant potential in these four areas requires several steps, which the government could handle with the help of its growing group of friends. Security needs to be restored to jumpstart economic activity. The exchange rate needs to be stabilized to reassure traders. And a sound economic plan is needed to spur investment.

Make America Go Away

Qamar Bashir

The Gaza conflict has intensified that erosion. While Washington frames its position as support for a longstanding ally, public opinion across Europe has grown sharply critical of Israeli military actions. In cities from Berlin to London to Copenhagen, demonstrations have linked U.S. policy directly to the humanitarian crisis. Israel itself has faced a steep reputational decline internationally, and by extension, so has the United States as its principal backer. At home, polarization further complicates America's global image.

THE red caps were impossible to miss. In Copenhagen's winter chill, protesters gathered waving Danish and Greenlandic flags, their message stitched in bold white letters across crimson fabric: "Make America Go Away." What began as a satirical play on Donald Trump's "Make America Great Again" slogan has become something more serious — a symbol of European unease, even defiance, in the face of escalating rhetoric over Greenland.

The hats were created by Danish vintage shop owner Jesper Rabe Tonnesen. Initially a novelty, they gained traction only after Washington intensified its language about Greenland's strategic value and potential American control. What might once have been dismissed as political theatre began to feel real. "This isn't reality TV," Tonnesen remarked. "It's actually reality." Within a single weekend, thousands of caps were ordered. Protest signs at Copenhagen's city hall declared "No Means No" and "Make America Smart Again," combining humor with unmistakable political intent.

The symbolism extended beyond Denmark. At the Winter Olympics opening ceremony in Milan, Vice President JD Vance was met with audible boos when his image appeared on stadium screens during the Parade of Nations. The U.S. delegation of athletes received cheers, but the mood shifted when the camera cut to the American political contingent. Italian protesters had already marched earlier that day against reports of U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement personnel advising on Olympic security. For many Europeans, the moment crystallized a broader frustration — not necessarily with the American people, but with Washington's posture.

The episode in Milan was not isolated. It came amid growing debate in Europe over U.S. foreign policy choices, including the controversial military operation that resulted in the capture of Venezuelan President Nicolás Maduro, heightened tensions with Iran, and Washington's unwavering alignment with Israel during the Gaza conflict. Each event, viewed individually, can be defended by American policymakers as a matter of national security or strategic necessity. But collectively, they are reshaping perceptions abroad. Greenland, long considered a peripheral issue outside diplomatic circles, has suddenly become central to Arctic geopolitics. Its vast mineral reserves, strategic location, and proximity to new shipping lanes have elevated its importance in a world defined by great-power competition. Yet the tone of Washington's overtures — seen by many in Denmark as coercive — has triggered a backlash. European governments have publicly reaffirmed Denmark's sovereignty and emphasized that territorial integrity is non-negotiable. The Arctic, once framed as a zone of cooperation, now risks becoming a theatre of suspicion. Relations with Canada have been further strained by controversy surrounding the Gordie Howe International Bridge, a $6.4 billion infrastructure project linking Detroit, Michigan, and Windsor, Ontario. The bridge — expected to open in 2026 — is jointly owned on a 50/50 basis by the State of Michigan and the Government of Canada. Notably, Canada financed the entire construction cost after Michigan lawmakers declined to contribute upfront funding. However, in January 2026, Trump threatened to block the bridge's opening unless the United States was "fully compensated," suggesting America should own "at least one half" of the asset — despite the existing equal ownership structure. The dispute underscores how a project designed to strengthen bilateral trade — facilitating approximately 25% of total U.S.-Canada goods trade that crosses the Detroit River corridor — has become entangled in broader trade tensions and political leverage, raising concerns about the reliability of cross-border economic cooperation.

Meanwhile, the operation in Venezuela has set a dangerous precedent for unilateral intervention and raised questions about international law.

Latin American leaders voiced alarm at the optics of a powerful nation apprehending a sitting head of state. Whether justified or not, the event reinforced a perception among some allies that Washington is increasingly comfortable acting alone.

Soft power — the intangible currency of legitimacy, cultural attraction, and moral authority — depends less on force and more on trust. The United States has historically wielded enormous soft power, built on alliances, democratic ideals, economic partnerships, and cultural influence. But soft power can erode quietly. It does not collapse in a single moment; it thins through accumulated grievances. The Gaza conflict has intensified that erosion. While Washington frames its position as support for a longstanding ally, public opinion across Europe has grown sharply critical of Israeli military actions.

In cities from Berlin to London to Copenhagen, demonstrations have linked U.S. policy directly to the humanitarian crisis. Israel itself has faced a steep reputational decline internationally, and by extension, so has the United States as its principal backer. At home, polarization further complicates America's global image. Open confrontations between federal and state authorities on immigration, sanctuary policies, and law enforcement create the impression of internal instability. For foreign observers, domestic discord weakens diplomatic leverage. Allies prefer predictability. Strategic partnerships rely on continuity.

The war in Ukraine also looms large. What began as a united Western front against Russian aggression has grown more complex. Questions about burden-sharing, fatigue, and long-term commitment circulate in European capitals. If America appears distracted or transactional, doubts multiply. What the red caps truly signify is not a desire for American disappearance, but a demand for recalibration. Satire often captures what formal diplomacy cannot. "Make America Go Away" is less a literal plea than an expression of frustration — a shorthand for "we feel unheard." Power exercised without broad consent becomes expensive. Influence sustained through persuasion endures. If Washington is perceived as substituting pressure for partnership, the cost will not appear immediately in treaties or troop deployments. It will surface in subtle ways: in public opinion polls, in parliamentary debates, in hesitant endorsements at multilateral forums. The United States does not deserve to be haunted by slogans calling for its departure, nor should its leaders be booed at global celebrations meant to transcend politics. But neither can those moments be dismissed as trivial. They are signals. They reflect accumulated discontent over tone, method, and alignment.

The challenge now is not whether America should go away. It is whether it can pause, reassess, and restore confidence among those who once viewed it as indispensable.

The red caps in Copenhagen may fade from fashion. The deeper question is whether the sentiments they represent will fade as well — or whether they mark the beginning of a more profound shift in the transatlantic relationship. Bridges can connect, or they can become bargaining chips. The choice, ultimately, rests not in slogans, but in statecraft.

Sportsmanship Spirit

Muhammad Mohsin Iqbal

Contrast that ethos with more recent scenes, where even the courtesy of a handshake after the toss has been denied. When an Indian captain declined to shake hands with his Pakistani counterpart, it signaled more than personal courtesy; it marked the visible entry of state politics into the arena of sport. What was once a sanctuary from power games has increasingly...

THE word sportsmanship was once spoken with reverence, not as a slogan but as a lived tradition, especially on the playing fields of South Asia. In earlier decades, when tempers between neighbouring states often ran high, sport still retained a rare dignity. Pakistan and India, despite wars, diplomatic breakdowns and enduring political hostility, continued to meet in hockey, cricket and other games under tense circumstances, yet the tension seldom poisoned the spirit of play. Teams travelled to each other's countries, crowds watched with passion but restraint, and the field itself remained a neutral ground where humanity quietly prevailed over hostility. Those who witnessed that era still recall small but telling gestures that defined sportsmanship. Fielders tying the shoelaces of an opposing batsman, sharing a laugh after a fierce contest, or applauding a good shot regardless of the flag on the jersey were not seen as acts of weakness. They were expressions of confidence, of a belief that sport was larger than politics. A particularly luminous example occurred on December 22, 1989, during a ODI match between Pakistan and India at Lahore's Gaddafi Stadium. Waqar Younis appealed to Indian batsman Srikanth to be given out LBW on an in-swinger ball, to which umpire Shakoor Rana raised his finger in the air. Srikanth protested and hesitated to leave. At that moment, Pakistan's captain Imran Khan did something almost unthinkable by today's standards; he invited the Srikanth to continue despite the decision of Umpire. Srikanth resumed his innings, only to be dismissed on the very next delivery, caught behind the wicket by Salim Yousaf. The scorecard recorded an ordinary dismissal, but history recorded an extraordinary act of grace. Contrast that ethos with more recent scenes, where even the courtesy of a handshake after the toss has been denied. When an Indian captain declined to shake hands with his Pakistani counterpart, it signalled more than personal courtesy; it marked the visible entry of state politics into the arena of sport. nated more than personal courtesy; it marked the visible entry of state politics into the arena of sport. What was once a sanctuary from power games has increasingly become an extension of them. International sport is always governed by federations and councils, each claiming independence, neutrality and adherence to rules that transcend borders. Yet doubts about their impartiality grow louder with each selective decision. The International Olympic Committee provides a striking illustration. Following Russia's invasion of Ukraine in February 2022, the IOC suspended the Russian Olympic Committee in October 2023, barring Russia from competing as a nation, including at the 2026 Winter Olympics. Funding was withdrawn and athletes were denied the right to participate under their national banner. The message was unambiguous: state actions would carry sporting consequences, regardless of the individual athlete's stance. Yet in another theatre of human tragedy, after nearly two years of devastating violence in Gaza, the IOC adopted a markedly different tone. It maintained that athletes should not be held responsible for the actions of their governments, principle that suddenly regained prominence when applied to Israeli athletes. This contrast has fuelled accusations of hypocrisy and bias, with critics arguing that moral principles appear flexible when aligned with Western interests. The IOC insists on complexity and case-by-case judgment, but to many observers, the inconsistency has tarnished its moral authority. Cricket, too, has not been spared. The International Cricket Council has repeatedly adjusted venues and formats in ways widely perceived as accommodating political pressure from powerful boards, particularly India's. During the 2025 Champions Trophy hosted by Pakistan, India refused to travel, citing security and political reasons. The ICC responded by shifting India's matches to neutral venues in the UAE under a hybrid model. Similar dynamics have shaped several Asia Cups, relocated or restructured due to India's reluctance to engage bilaterally with Pakistan, even if those tournaments formally fall under the Asian Cricket Council. The controversy deepened during the ICC Men's T20 World Cup 2026, co-hosted by India and Sri Lanka. Bangladesh requested that its group-stage matches be moved from Indian venues to Sri Lanka, citing security and political concerns amid strained relations. The ICC rejected the request after assessments found no credible threat. When Bangladesh refused to travel, it was replaced by Scotland, effectively excluding Bangladesh from the tournament. No penalties were imposed, and as a conciliatory gesture, Bangladesh was promised hosting rights for an additional ICC event in the future. Yet comparisons were inevitable: why was India accommodated with neutral venues, while Bangladesh was shown the door? The episode exposed the fragile intersection of power, politics and principle in modern sport. Pakistan's response, however, stood out. By initially expressing solidarity with Bangladesh and questioning the apparent double standards, Pakistan sought to free the game from monopoly and moral selectivity. Though it later agreed to play for the broader stability of the tournament, the gesture of support was widely acknowledged by Bangladesh as an act rooted in fairness rather than expediency. Sport, at its best, is a civilising force. It teaches restraint in victory, dignity in defeat, and respect across divides that politics often deepens. When politics colonises the playing field, the game loses not only its innocence but its credibility. The lesson from Lahore in 1989 still resonates; rules matter, but spirit matters more. If international sport wishes to retain its moral claim, it must rediscover the courage to apply principles evenly and allow the game, once again, to breathe free of influence.

Afghan govt supports TTP, blames Pakistan

Pakistan's claims that TTP benefits from freedom of movement and access to resources in Afghanistan, explicitly highlights that Pakistan is the main target of TTP attacks. It also validates that Pakistan is a victim of terrorism bearing the brunt of violence originating from Afghanistan. The Spokesperson said Pakistan's legal teams participated in the proceedings of the Court of Arbitration in the Hague early this month. Pakistan requested the court to address the implication and application of the Indus Water Treaty with respect to certain design elements on the run of river's hydroelectric projects. He said India was invited by the court of arbitration to participate in the proceedings. Under the Indus Water Treaty, it was obliged to do so but it chose not to appear. Replying to a question about Sawalkote Hydropower Project on River Chenab by India, the Spokesperson said the matter has been taken up at the level of Indus Water Commissioners for information and consultations as mandated by the Indus Water Treaty of 1960.

The officer underlined that the war against terrorism was not only the responsibility of the security forces, the army, police or the Frontier Corps, but of the entire nation. He also said that India was behind all sponsored terrorism in Pakistan, adding that "Fitna-ul-Hindustan" was an enemy of the Baloch people and a hurdle to the development of Balochistan. Addressing the lower house of parliament a day earlier, Defence Minister Khawaja Asif termed the opposition leader's statement as irresponsible and a deliberate attempt to malign a national institution.

Muhammad Karim a proud story of Pakistan

GILGIT: Coming from a remote mountain village and reaching the world's biggest winter sports event is not easy. Muhammad Karim, who belongs to Naltar Valley in Gilgit-Baltistan and is Pakistan's leading alpine skier, has done it through hard work and patience. Today, he stands as a symbol of hope for young athletes across the country. Muhammad Karim is making history by qualifying for the Winter Olympics for the fourth consecutive time. He is the only Pakistani athlete to achieve this honour in winter sports. He will represent Pakistan at the Winter Olympics 2026 in Milan Cortina, Italy. For a country where winter sports receive little attention, this achievement is very important.

Born on May 1, 1995, Muhammad Karim first appeared at the Winter Olympics in 2014. At that time, he was still a teenager. Since then, he has represented Pakistan at every Winter Olympics. He competed in Sochi in 2014, PyeongChang in 2018, and Beijing in 2022. Now he is preparing for his fourth appearance in Italy in 2026. No other Pakistani athlete has maintained such consistency at the Olympic level. Talking to APP Muhammad Karim recalled his early days with humility, adding that he learned skiing as a child on simple, homemade skis in Naltar. He never imagined that one day he would compete at the Olympics. Reaching the Games four times, he said, feels like a dream. According to him, this success does not belong to him alone but to the whole nation. Muhammad Karim earned his place at the 2026 Winter Olympics through tough international competitions. He took part in Slalom and Giant Slalom races, and later he competed in more qualifying events in Turkey between December 2025 and January 2026. By earning the required points under the rules of the International Ski and Snowboard Federation, he secured Pakistan's qualification. The final quota list issued in January 2026 confirmed Pakistan's participation.

Talking about the challenges, Muhammad Karim said that athletes from developed countries enjoy better facilities and longer training seasons. Limited training and funding oppor-

Police in crime-blighted Argentine city stage mutiny

ROSARIO: Police officers demanding better pay and mental health support in the crime-blighted Argentine city of Rosario burned tires on a third day of demonstrations Wednesday, sparked by a spate of suicides within the force. Their protest resulted in authorities agreeing to a wage increase, prompting the officers to call off their action. The officers demanded better pay and more psychological support as they battle drug-related crime in Argentina's third-most populous city, hometown of football star Lionel Messi. The trigger for the protests, which began on Monday, was the death by suicide last week of a 32-year-old officer – the latest in a string of such deaths in Santa Fe province, where Rosario is located. Monday's protest ended in scuffles between the demonstrators and fellow officers sent to disperse them. – APP

Egyptian Salma Badour wins gold in individual rowing

Tunisia's Yeldes Othmani of the Tabarka Association for Marine Sports and Fishing took silver in 3:23.24. Morocco's Marwa Naqiri of Rabat Beach Club claimed bronze after winning the third-place race in 3:04.40, ahead of Saudi Rowing Federation's Mariam Kaaki, who finished fourth in 3:24.57. The singles results followed the doubles competition held the previous day, where Tunisia's Yeldes Othmani and Wala Omri captured gold in 2:42.07. Saudi Arabia's Al Jazi Al Ibrahim and Mariam Kaaki secured silver in 2:55.43. Egypt's Al Maadi and Yacht Club duo Mariam Abou Wafa and Salma Badour took bronze after winning the third-place race in 2:46.50. The coastal rowing competition featured six teams representing the UAE, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, Egypt, Morocco and Tunisia, highlighting the sport's growing presence in women's competition across the Arab world. The medal ceremony was attended by Sheikh Khalid bin Ahmed Al Qasimi, Chairman of the Higher Organizing Committee of the Games; Hanan Al Mahmood, Vice Chair of the Committee; Abdulaziz Al Anzi, Secretary-General of the Union of Arab National Olympic Committees; Moza Al Shamsi, Games Director; and Annamarie Phelps, Vice President of the International Rowing Federation. Badour said the competition was highly competitive, noting the narrow margins between athletes made the singles gold particularly valuable and a fitting response after missing out on doubles gold the previous day. The Arab Women's Clubs Games are being held in Sharjah and organized by the Sharjah Women's Sports Foundation through Feb. 12. The event features 65 teams from 16 Arab countries competing in nine individual and team sports, aiming to strengthen women's sports regionally and internationally. – Agencies

ISLAMABAD: Federal Tax Ombudsman (FTO) Zafar-ul-Haq Hijazi has reiterated that alleviating taxpayers' difficulties and promoting ease of doing business remain the foremost priorities of his institution. Addressing a well-attended gathering at the Islamabad Chamber of Commerce and Industry (ICCI), he highlighted the proactive role of the FTO in providing relief to aggrieved taxpayers and addressing maladministration within the taxation system since its inception.

Speaking to representatives of trade and industry, former ICCI Presidents, Executive Committee members, and senior office-bearers including Senior Vice President Tahir Ayub and Vice President

Irfan Chaudhry, the FTO made it clear that there would be no compromise on the respect and honour of taxpayers. He stated that taxpayers are the backbone of the government system, as the State runs on their contributions. He emphasized that abolishing the culture of harassment of tax filers is among his top priorities and declared zero tolerance for any form of malpractice, mistreatment, or harassment.

Zafar-ul-Haq Hijazi announced the establishment of three Advisory Committees at the headquarters level: the Income Tax Advisory Committee, Sales and Excise Tax Advisory Committee, and Customs Advisory Committee. These committees will include the President of ICCI, the President of Rawalpindi Chamber of Commerce and Industry, the President of the Tax Bar, along with other relevant stakeholders. The committees will deliberate separately and advise the FTO on improving service delivery. Similar regional committees will also be formed to ensure effective coordination and facilitation at the local level. He stated that the primary purpose of his visit to ICCI was to bridge the gap between taxpayers and the FTO and to assure the business community that the institution stands firmly behind them for justice. He urged the attendees to bring their issues directly to his notice, assuring them that they would witness a visible difference in the resolution of their complaints.

Almas Ali Jovindah, Advisor (Legal) to the FTO, encouraged the business community to act as ambassadors of the institution, emphasizing that the FTO provides free-of-cost and prompt relief to complainants against the Federal Board of Revenue (FBR). He informed that the FTO is dispensing justice within 60 days and stressed the need to strengthen this partnership for the larger interest of the community. ICCI President Sardar Tahir Mehmood, while highlighting issues faced by the business community, including those relating to the real estate sector, acknowledged that tax collection is fundamental to the functioning of the State. He appreciated the business community for fulfilling its national responsibility but underscored that a fair, just, efficient, and simple taxation system is essential to build confidence among taxpayers. US, Iran showing flexibility on nuclear deal, FT reports

The United States and Iran are showing flexibility on a nuclear deal, with Washington appearing "willing" to tolerate some nuclear enrichment, Turkish Foreign Minister Hakan Fidan told the Financial Times in an interview published Thursday. "It is positive that the Americans appear willing to tolerate Iranian enrichment within clearly set boundaries," Fidan, who has been involved in talks with both Washington and Tehran, told the FT. "The Iranians now recognize that they need to reach a deal with the Americans, and the Americans understand that the Iranians have certain limits. It's pointless to try to force them." Washington has until now demanded Iran relinquish its stockpile of uranium enriched to up to 60 percent fissile purity, a small step away from the 90 percent that is considered weapons grade. Iranian President Masoud Pezeshkian has said Iran would continue to demand the lifting of financial sanctions and insist on its nuclear rights including enrichment. Fidan told the FT he believed Tehran "genuinely wants to reach a real agreement" and would accept restrictions on enrichment levels and a strict inspection regime, as it did in the 2015 agreement with the US and others. US and Iranian diplomats held talks through Omani mediators in Oman last week in an effort to revive diplomacy, after President Donald Trump positioned a naval flotilla in the region, raising fears of new military action. Trump on Tuesday said he was considering sending a second aircraft carrier to the Middle East, even as Washington and Tehran prepared to resume negotiations. The Turkish foreign minister, however, cautioned that broadening the Iran-US talks to ballistic missiles would bring "nothing but another war."—APP

Chinese doctors conduct first aid training for UNICEF staff

BEIJING: The 26th batch of Chinese medical team successfully conducted an on-site first aid training program for staff of United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) Sierra Leone at the UNICEF Head Office in Freetown on Feb. 9, 2026. This vital two-day training aims to equip participants with essential first aid skills, including cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR), trauma first aid, and emergency response techniques, thereby enhancing their preparedness for medical emergencies. The training commenced with a theoretical session where participants learned about the principles of first aid, followed by practical demonstrations designed to reinforce the skills taught. "On behalf of the Chinese medical team, we are delighted to provide this on-site first-aid training to UNICEF Sierra Leone," Captain Liu Longfei of the 26th batch Chinese medical team stated, emphasizing the initiative as part of their shared commitment to protecting lives in Sierra Leone. Liu highlighted the significance of equipping UNICEF staff with necessary skills for emergency situations. "This training supports our staff in dealing with emergencies effectively," he noted. Since 2024, the Chinese medical team has collaborated with various organizations and individuals, including students, in offering first aid training across sectors such as mining and healthcare. This collaboration underscores a collective commitment to health and safety within the community. UNICEF Representative to Sierra Leone, Rudolph Schwenk, spoke about the importance of ensuring staff wellbeing and security.

"At UNICEF, the wellbeing, safety, and security of our staff are central to our duty of care," he remarked. Schwenk added that it is crucial to equip colleagues with practical skills to respond effectively in medical emergencies, which helps create a safe and supportive working environment. "This training represents an important investment in staff wellbeing and emergency preparedness. The knowledge and skills shared over the course of this session will strengthen our collective capacity to respond promptly and appropriately should an incident occur, whether in the workplace or in the field," he added. Swapping roles from trainers to participants, both Liu and Schwenk encouraged all attendees to engage fully with the training. Schwenk urged participants to ask questions and actively participate in practical sessions to maximize the training's value. "We sincerely appreciate the Chinese medical team for their continued partnership and for generously sharing their expertise with UNICEF," he expressed. "Your contribution reflects the strong spirit of collaboration that underpins our work and supports our shared commitment to safeguarding lives and promoting health." The successful collaboration between the 26th batch of Chinese medical team and UNICEF Sierra Leone exemplifies the dedication of both organizations to enhance health safety and emergency preparedness in the nation. As Sierra Leone continues to face various health challenges, such initiatives are critical for building a resilient workforce capable of responding to unforeseen incidents.—DNA

Turkish, Greek leaders voice desire to resolve issues

ANKARA: The leaders of Turkiye and Greece voiced their desire to resolve longstanding maritime disputes hobbling ties during discussions in Ankara on Wednesday, as the NATO allies and historic rivals try to build on warming relations. The neighbors have been at odds over a range of issues for decades, primarily maritime boundaries and rights in the Aegean, an area widely believed to hold energy resources and with key implications for airspace and military activity. Following years of heightened tensions, a 2023 declaration on friendly relations prompted a thaw in rhetoric, though their maritime issues have remained unresolved and the two sides still disagree over regional matters. Speaking at a press conference in Ankara with Greek Prime Minister Kyriakos Mitsotakis, Turkish President Tayyip Erdogan said they had discussed their issues in the Aegean and eastern Mediterranean "in an open and sincere way" during the talks. "While the issues may be thorny, they are not unsolvable on the basis of international law. I saw that we were in agreement with my friend Kyriakos," Erdogan said. He added that the two countries would continue working to achieve their goal of reaching $10 billion in bilateral trade. Mitsotakis said he hoped circumstances would allow the sides to solve a dispute on the demarcation of maritime and exclusive economic zones in the Aegean and eastern Mediterranean. "It is time to remove any substantial and formal threats to our relations, if not now, then when?" Mitsotakis said. "Destiny has appointed us to live in the same neighborhood. We cannot change geography, but we can make it an ally, choosing convergence, dialogue and trust in international law... to build a future of peace, progress and prosperity for our people." Despite the positive tone, Greece's foreign minister earlier said Athens planned to extend its territorial waters further, including potentially in the Aegean. Shortly after, Ankara said it had issued a maritime notice urging Greece to coordinate research activities in areas of the Aegean that Turkiye considers part of its continental shelf. In 1995, Turkiye's parliament declared a casus belli – a cause for war – should Greece unilaterally extend its territorial waters beyond six nautical miles in the Aegean, a stance Athens says violates international maritime law. Greece says it wants only to discuss demarcation of maritime zones. Mitsotakis also said the flows of migrants in the Aegean Sea had decreased by almost 60 percent last year due to cooperation between the two countries, adding this should be strengthened. Fifteen migrants died in a shipwreck off the Greek island of Chios last week after their boat collided with a Greek coast guard vessel and sank in the Aegean Sea off the Turkish coast. Turkiye is a transit country for migrants seeking to reach the European Union via Greece. Ankara says the EU has not fully delivered on commitments under a 2016 migration deal and Athens wants Turkiye to do more to curb irregular crossings.—Agencies

China to reduce levies on EU dairy products

BEIJING: China will reduce duties on "certain dairy products" imported from the European Union but still impose levies of up to 11.7 percent for five years, the commerce ministry in Beijing said on Thursday.

The reduction continues an easing of trade tensions between the two giant markets following agreements in recent months on minimum prices for Chinese electric vehicles exported to the EU and reduced duties for European cognac and pork products sold to China. The "anti-subsidy levies" will be imposed after an investigation found "certain dairy products originating from the EU were subsidised, causing substantial damage to the dairy industry in China", the commerce ministry said in a statement on Thursday. The rates will be applied from Friday and range from 7.4 percent to 11.7 percent, down from the 21.9 percent to 42.7 percent China imposed in December.

They hit a range of items, including fresh and processed cheese, curd, blue cheese and some milk and cream, the commerce ministry said. Thursday's announcement marked the end of an anti-subsidy subsidy probe launched by Chinese officials in August 2024. The EU said last month that Chinese electric carmakers could agree to minimum import prices instead of tariffs, an outcome Beijing welcomed as a "soft-landing" in the bitter dispute over the sector. Beijing reduced levies on EU pork products in December, while it also reached an agreement on minimum prices with EU brandy and cognac makers last year.—APP

At least 21 drown in Nile boat sinking in Sudan: local govt

KHARTOUM: At least 21 people drowned when a boat sank in the Nile River in northern Sudan, according to the local state government and eyewitnesses interviewed by AFP. River Nile State said Thursday that 21 bodies had been recovered after the accident, listed their names and warned that some passengers were still missing. The boat was crossing the river between the villages of Tayba Al-Khawad and Deim Al-Qarai, according to the local government's statement. The statement did not explain the cause of the accident. Eyewitnesses told AFP the boat was carrying 30 people. The Sudanese Doctors Network said in a statement that six of the boat's passengers survived. The group said the incident exposes "the fragility of river transport and the absence of basic safety requirements, as well as the complete absence of local authorities and civil defense rescue teams in the early hours of the incident." Many Sudanese rely on river transport via single-engine boats captained by solo operators. The country's infrastructure has been collapsing due to a war that has been ongoing for nearly three years.—APP

Principal dies after Thailand school shooting

BANGKOK: A teenage shooter accused of killing the principal of a school in Thailand using a police officer's weapon was in custody on Thursday, authorities said, after an attack that also injured two students. Police shot and arrested the 18-year-old on Wednesday after he stormed into the Phatong Prathan Khiriat School in southern Songkhla province with a gun, police and other authorities said, adding that several shots were fired. School director Sasiphat Sinsamosorn died in hospital early on Thursday after being admitted with gunshot wounds and undergoing surgery, the Songkhla public relations department said in a statement. She was shot before police intervened and apprehended the teenager, Songkhla police chief Teerasak Chaiyotha told AFP. The 18-year-old suspect was being treated in hospital after being grazed by a bullet and had not been charged pending an investigation, Teerasak said. Police had responded to a report of a teenager "acting erratically", he said. Teerasak told reporters on Wednesday that the suspect was hospitalised for psychiatric treatment in December and had been discharged. He said the teen stabbed a police officer with a knife and stole his weapon - a 9mm pistol - just before the incident at the school, which he then used to carry out the attack. - APP

Instagram CEO denies addiction claims

LOS ANGELES: Instagram CEO Adam Mosseri on Wednesday rejected the notion that users could be clinically addicted to social media, as he testified in a landmark California trial over whether his company knowingly hooked children on its platform for profit. Meta - the parent company of Instagram and Facebook - and Google-owned YouTube are defendants in the blockbuster trial, which could set a legal precedent regarding whether social media giants deliberately designed their platforms to be addictive to children. "I think it's important to differentiate between clinical addiction and problematic use," Mosseri said as he was grilled by plaintiff attorney Mark Lanier. "I'm sure I said that I've been addicted to a Netflix show when I binged it really late one night, but I don't think it's the same thing as clinical addiction," he added. Lanier immediately challenged this point, emphasizing that the witness did not have a degree in medicine or psychology. "I've never claimed being able to diagnose addiction clinically," Mosseri responded during the exchange. "I'm sure I was using the word too casually." Facing him, mothers of teenagers who had taken their own lives held back their anger in the public gallery. - APP

Govt debt rises in 1HFY26 to Rs78.5tr

KARACHI: Government debt rose by Rs641 billion, or 0.82%, by end-December, highlighting continued borrowing needs, largely from domestic sources, and the strain on fiscal consolidation. The News reported. Total government debt stood at Rs78.5 trillion as of December 2025, up from Rs77.8 trillion at the end of June, according to State Bank of Pakistan (SBP) data released on Wednesday. The stock was up 1.3% month-on-month and 9.6% year-on-year. The increase came despite a budget surplus of Rs542 billion, or 0.4% of GDP, recorded in July-December FY26, compared with a deficit of Rs1.5 trillion, or 1.3% of GDP, in the same period last year. The increase in central government debt reflects persistent fiscal needs and rollover of existing obligations, said Saad Hanif, head of research at Ismail Iqbal Securities. - APP

Roundtable on Uzbek President's visit

Pak-Uzbek Partnership: a new chapter in regional connectivity

The roundtable was convened in the backdrop of Uzbek President Shavkat Mirziyoyev's landmark visit to Pakistan, which was widely hailed as a great success. Ambassador Alisher Tukhtaev of Uzbekistan moderated the session, warmly welcoming participants

ASNAR M BHATTI

ISLAMABAD: Experts and policymakers have long emphasized that peace and stability in Afghanistan are indispensable for unlocking the full potential of regional connectivity, trade, and prosperity. Afghanistan's geographic position makes it a natural bridge between Central Asia and South Asia, and without stability there, the vision of seamless integration across the region remains incomplete. This consensus was strongly echoed during a recent roundtable discussion organized by the Embassy of Uzbekistan in Islamabad, titled "Uzbekistan and Pakistan on the Path to Strategic Partnership." The roundtable was convened in the backdrop of Uzbek President Shavkat Mirziyoyev's landmark visit to Pakistan, which was widely hailed as a great success. Ambassador Alisher Tukhtaev of Uzbekistan moderated the session, warmly welcoming participants and expressing hope that the presidential visit would open new dimensions in bilateral relations. He underscored that the momentum generated by the visit should be harnessed to elevate ties to unprecedented heights. Joining the session online, B. Aloev, First Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs of Uzbekistan, described the visit as highly fruitful. Having accompanied President Mirziyoyev to Pakistan, he highlighted the Uzbek leader's constructive meetings with Pakistan's President, Prime Minister, and Chief of Defence Forces. Aloev noted that both sides had agreed to ambitiously raise bilateral trade to $2 billion within five years—a target he described as challenging yet achievable, given the strong political will on both sides.

Ambassador Jauhar Saleem also addressed the gathering, emphasizing the cultural and historical similarities between Uzbekistan and Pakistan. He expressed optimism that people-to-people exchanges would deepen, strengthening the social fabric of bilateral ties. Intellectual and academic voices added further weight to the discussion. Professor Zafar Nawaz Jaspal stressed that regional peace and stability were prerequisites for progress, warning that terrorism remained a shared threat. He argued that terrorist groups operate in syndicates, and therefore a syndicate-style collective response was essential. Pakistan, he noted, has long borne the brunt of fighting terrorism, but regional cooperation is vital for lasting peace. Khalid Taimur Akram, Executive Director of the Pakistan Research Center for a Community with Shared Future, highlighted the economic aspects of the visit. He pointed out the strong determination on both sides to expand relations across trade, investment, and infrastructure. Similarly, Asif Tanvir from the Muslim Institute spoke about the deep cultural and religious connections binding the two nations, suggesting that these ties could serve as a solid foundation for broader cooperation. The roundtable made clear that the Uzbek president's visit was not just a diplomatic milestone but a strategic step toward reshaping regional dynamics. By reaffirming their commitment to peace in Afghanistan, both Uzbekistan and Pakistan signaled their recognition that stability there is the linchpin for regional connectivity. Enhanced trade, cultural exchanges, and security cooperation are all contingent upon this peace. In essence, the dialogue underscored a shared vision: a stable Afghanistan enabling Central and South Asia to connect, trade, and prosper together. With strong political will, ambitious economic targets, and a commitment to collective security, Uzbekistan and Pakistan appear poised to take their partnership to new heights ushering in a future of greater regional integration and stability. - APP

US House votes to rescind Trump tariffs on Canada

WASHINGTON: US House lawmakers voted Wednesday to reject Donald Trump's tariffs on Canadian goods, sweeping aside the president's last-gasp threat of election consequences for Republicans to deliver a rare rebuke on his signature economic policy. The measure brought by Democrats was approved 219-211, with six Republicans joining the effort. It remains largely a symbolic move. The House can consider measures to end the national emergencies Trump declared last year to impose sweeping tariffs on imports from various countries. But any actions aimed at undoing Trump's tariffs on Canada and other trading partners will still need US Senate passage and the president's signature. Even if it clears the Senate, it would face a certain veto by Trump, and Congress would unlikely muster the two-thirds majority needed to override a veto. Trump sought to inject himself into the action at the last minute, issuing a direct political threat to lawmakers from his own Republican Party as the vote was taking place on the House floor. "Any Republican, in the House or the Senate, that votes against TARIFFS will seriously suffer the consequences come Election time," Trump posted on his Truth Social platform. "TARIFFS have given us Economic and National Security, and no Republican should be responsible for destroying this privilege," he added.

Wednesday's rebuke comes after the expiration of a measure barring any vote on the issue of tariffs in the chamber - a move that has stifled opposition to Trump's trade policy. House Speaker Mike Johnson, a Trump ally in Congress, sought to renew this prohibition on Tuesday but was unsuccessful, as three House Republicans voted alongside Democrats to block the move. Earlier Wednesday, House Republican Don Bacon posted on social media that lawmakers "cannot & should not outsource our responsibilities." "As an old fashioned Conservative I know tariffs are a tax on American consumers," he added, noting that debates and votes on the issue should occur in the House. - APP

No changes will be made to net metering policy

NEWS DESK

ISLAMABAD: Facing outcry from friends and foes alike over the newly introduced net metering reforms, Energy Minister Awas Leghari has said that no changes will be made to the solar net metering policy for existing consumers for now. Leghari blamed "social media trend" for the growing opposition against the newly introduced reforms that effectively ended the net metering regime and replaced net metering with the net billing mechanism. "My wife opposed this policy, saying you had increased my bill after switching to net billing from net metering," the minister said on today's show. He said the prime minister has ordered that the net billing system should not apply to existing consumers for now and has told the Power Division to challenge the regulator's decision. Earlier today, Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif took notice of the new Prosumer Regulations 2026 issued by the National Electric Power Regulatory Authority (NEPRA). According to a statement issued by the PM Office, the premier directed the Power Division to immediately file an appeal with the power regulator to protect the contracts of existing solar consumers. The prime minister, chairing a high-level special meeting on Nepra's new regulations, directed the Power Division to formulate a comprehensive action plan in this regard so that the burden of 466,000 consumers benefiting from solar would not be borne by more than 37.6 million consumers using electricity only from the national grid.

Deepening Israeli control over Palestinian lands violation

UNITED NATIONS: UN High Commissioner for Human Rights Volker Turk called on Thursday for Israel to rescind recent measures to expand control over Palestinian lands in the occupied West Bank. "This is yet another step by the Israeli authorities towards rendering a viable Palestinian State impossible, in violation of the Palestinian people's right to self-determination," he said in a statement issued in Geneva. He warned that if implemented, the decisions "will undoubtedly accelerate the dispossession of Palestinians and their forcible transfer, and lead to the creation of more illegal Israeli settlements." This in turn "will also further deprive Palestinians of their natural resources and restrict their enjoyment of other human rights." On 8 February, the Israeli security cabinet approved a package of measures that would increase Israeli civilian authori-

US allies at NATO focus on Europe as the Trump administration steps back

Rutte told reporters before chairing the meeting, "I totally accept it, agree with it."

"They have always consistently pleaded for Europe more, Canada doing more, taking more care of the defense of NATO territory, of course in conjunction with the United States," he said. That means more European spending on conventional weapons and defense, while the US guarantees NATO's nuclear deterrent. But doubts linger, and surprises from the Trump administration cannot be ruled out. Allies still wonder whether more US troops will be withdrawn from Europe.

"What for me is the most important is the no-surprise policy that has been agreed between the NATO secretary-general and the US," Dutch Defense Minister Ruben Brekelmans said. Publicly at least, the Trump administration is doing much less at NATO. A year ago, Hegseth warned that America's security priorities lie elsewhere and that Europe would have to look after itself, and Ukraine in its battle against Russia's full-scale invasion.

Supplies of US guns and money that were sent to Ukraine by the previous administration of President Joe Biden have dried up under Trump. European allies and Canada are obliged to buy weapons from the United States to donate now. Western backers of Ukraine were also meeting at NATO on Thursday to drum up more military support. A scheme proudly championed by the Pentagon under Biden, the Ukraine Defense Contact Group is now chaired by the UK and Germany. UK Defense Secretary John Healey announced that Britain would provide "an extra half a billion pounds ($682 million) in urgent air defense to Ukraine. This is Britain being a force for good in the world, building a new deal for European security within NATO." Sweden also intends to fund the purchase of more American weapons. The Netherlands will send more flight simulators to help Ukrainian fighter pilots train to fly F-16 jets.
