Law moot strengthens legal education, professional standards

ISLAMABAD: The Research Society of International Law (RSIL), in collaboration with the Pakistan Bar Council's Directorate of Legal Education (PBC-DLE), convened a National Conference titled "The Future of Legal Education and Practice in Pakistan: Innovation, Excellence, and Impact" here on Tuesday. The conference brought together over 200 participants from across Pakistan's legal community, including representatives from judicial academies, former judges, bar councils, senior and junior lawyers, legal academics, law students, reform specialists, and legal technology innovators. The conference focused on three key areas: improving law school training, strengthening continuing professional development for lawyers and judges, and addressing contemporary challenges such as legal ethics, court decorum, workplace harassment, and the integration of technology into legal practice. Mr Pir Masood Chishti (Advocate Supreme Court; Vice Chairman, Pakistan Bar Council) reflected on the evolution of legal education in Pakistan. He noted that earlier two-year English LLB programs produced competent lawyers despite limited resources, while later expansion to three- and five-year programs, rapid privatisation, and affiliated law colleges led to declining standards. He highlighted recent reforms, including restrictions on new law colleges and the shift to a four-year LLB, aimed at improving affordability and quality. He emphasized the need for stronger curricula, professional training, legal ethics, fee regulation, and effective mentorship of young lawyers. The opening plenary brought together senior judges, Bar Council members, and practicing lawyers to discuss institutional collaboration for raising professional standards. The panel included Mr Naveed Ahmed Soomro (District & Sessions Judge; Senior Faculty Member, Sindh Judicial Academy), Mr Amir Saeed Rawn (ASC; Member, Pakistan Bar Council), Mr Asad Rahim Khan (ASC; Partner, Ash-tar Ali & Rahim LLP), and Ms. Sahar Bandial (Advocate High Court). Speaking on Raising the Bar, Judge Naveed Ahmed Soomro highlighted gaps between legal education and modern judicial competencies, calling for greater emphasis on practical training, research, and specialization. Amir Saeed Rawn stressed structured apprenticeships, enforcement of professional standards, and expanded Continuing Legal Education, particularly for young lawyers. Sahar Bandial addressed ethical challenges posed by artificial intelligence and ongoing barriers faced by women in the legal profession. Asad Rahim Khan pointed to weaknesses in legal education, mentorship, and economic access, supporting reforms such as strengthening the Law-GAT and introducing minimum stipends for junior lawyers. A major highlight of the conference was the technology showcase, where the Ministry of Law and Justice and legal technology companies demonstrated how artificial intelligence and digital tools are transforming legal practice. —APP

HEC chairman to be made on open merit, Senate told

ISLAMABAD: Federal Minister for Law and Justice Azam Nazeer Tarar on Tuesday informed the Senate of Pakistan that the process for the appointment of the Chairman of the Higher Education Commission was being restarted to ensure selection on open merit. Responding to a question raised by Senator Kamran Murtaza, the minister said the government had earlier initiated the appointment process and conducted interviews through a search committee. However, he said it was felt that another round of the process was required keeping in view the wide-ranging and critical functions of the HEC, including curriculum oversight, regulation of universities and maintenance of academic standards. He clarified that the HEC could not be termed dysfunctional in the absence of a permanent chairman, as it was a statutory commission whose meetings were not dependent solely on the chairman's presence. He said the Executive Director played a key role in managing day-to-day affairs, while provisions for an acting chairman also existed under the law. Azam Nazeer Tarar said the Prime Minister was personally overseeing the process to ensure that the most competent individual was appointed strictly on merit. The minister further clarified that the post of HEC chairman was an open-merit position and not subject to provincial rotation or quota.—APP

Science and technology key to sustainable uplift

ISLAMABAD: Former Prime Minister of Pakistan Raja Pervaiz Ashraf has said that progress in the fields of science and technology is indispensable for the sustainable and balanced development of any country. In the modern era, only those nations are moving ahead in the race for development that make research, innovation and scientific knowledge the foundational pillars of their national policies, said a press release here on Tuesday. He expressed these views while addressing the closing ceremony of an international conference titled "Frontiers in Science" at Allama Iqbal Open University (AIU) as the chief guest. He said that effective and long-term solutions to Pakistan's economic, social and environmental challenges are possible only through modern scientific research, promotion of technology and innovative thinking. Raja Pervaiz Ashraf emphasized that educational institutions especially universities must be transformed from mere teaching centers into hubs of research, innovation and knowledge creation, which he described as one of the most critical needs of the time. Government reforms to lift exports

ISLAMABAD: The government's recent economic measures are expected to support export growth after months of distress signals from the textile and allied industries, business leader and former president of the Islamabad Chamber of Commerce, Shahid Rasheed Butt, said on Tuesday.

In a statement, Butt said Prime Minister Shahbaz Sharif announced a package of reforms after repeated warnings from exporters about high energy costs, weak demand, and tight financing. He said parts of the business community had welcomed the steps and were providing limited but timely relief to the textile and selected industrial sectors that are important to Pakistan's export earnings.

Shahid Rasheed Butt said the package included a Rs 4.04 per-unit reduction in industrial electricity tariffs, lowering costs for export-oriented units. He added that the export refinancing rate had been cut by 300 basis points, lowering borrowing costs for firms already struggling with high working capital costs. According to him, electricity wheeling charges had also been rationalised to below Rs 9 per unit, giving industries greater flexibility in sourcing power. He said changes to the Export Facilitation Scheme had removed disadvantages faced by upstream manufacturers, creating a more level playing field within the textile value chain. Linking the measures to longer-term goals, Butt said value-added textile exports could rise from about $18 billion to $30 billion over the next five years if policies remained consistent. He said the industry was targeting annual export growth of around 10 percent.—APP

Pak, Uzbekistan agree to fast-track trade, investment

SAIFULLAH ANSAR

ISLAMABAD: Jam Kamal Khan, Federal Minister for Commerce, held a detailed meeting in Islamabad with Laziz Kudratov, Minister of Investment, Industry and Trade of the Republic of Uzbekistan, to review progress in bilateral economic cooperation and agree on practical steps to accelerate trade, investment, connectivity and sectoral partnerships. Welcoming the Uzbek delegation, the Federal Minister noted that Pakistan-Uzbekistan engagement has intensified significantly over the past two years through frequent high-level contacts and institutional follow-up, and stressed that the priority now is to "materialize" opportunities by closing gaps in logistics, business linkages and implementation, said a release issued here on Tuesday. He also pointed to the importance of keeping trade and investment coordination streamlined, while reaffirming Pakistan's full support for Uzbekistan across trade development initiatives. The Uzbek Minister, thanking Pakistan for the hospitality and arrangements for the delegation's visit, said both sides were preparing for an important upcoming high-level visit from Uzbekistan which, he expressed confidence, would mark another milestone in bilateral partnership. He highlighted improving trade indicators, sharing that bilateral trade had increased by around 10 percent last year, with Uzbekistan's imports from Pakistan rising by about 12 percent, while Uzbek exports to Pakistan grew by around 8 percent. He underlined the need to balance and scale trade, setting an ambitious target of $2 billion in bilateral trade through deeper industrial cooperation and new sectoral collaboration. A major focus of the meeting was progress on trade facilitation and market access. The Uzbek side appreciated the constructive negotiations on the preferential trade framework, including expansion of the product coverage list from 34 to 92 items, and indicated interest in broadening cooperation into services and investment-led arrangements over time. The Federal Minister, in turn, welcomed the forward movement on trade arrangements and emphasized that sustained implementation—supported by business-to-business engagement—would be essential for turning frameworks into increased shipments, contracts and joint ventures. Investment and industrial cooperation featured prominently, with Uzbekistan noting that 228 Pakistani companies are currently operating in Uzbekistan and that 80 new companies were registered there in the last year alone. Both sides discussed expanding partnerships in priority sectors including food security, mining, textiles, leather, and pharmaceuticals, alongside value-added manufacturing and specialized industrial cooperation. The Uzbek Minister said Uzbek companies are keen to explore investment and projects in Pakistan as well, including in food security and meat production, rice cultivation opportunities, and mining. The two sides also reviewed the positive momentum in people-to-people and business connectivity, welcoming the resumption and scaling up of direct air links. Uzbekistan reported that flights have been restarted and expanded to multiple weekly frequencies from Islamabad and Lahore, with additional services planned from Karachi, aiming to reach six flights per week between the two countries—an increase expected to strengthen commercial travel, tourism and trade engagement. On regional connectivity and logistics, both sides discussed challenges stemming from disruption of traditional routes, particularly due to border and transit constraints in the neighborhood. In this context, the meeting explored alternative corridors and the role of National Logistics Corporation in routing cargo through the northern corridor and via Kashgar as a logistics and warehousing hub. The Uzbek side shared that Pakistani logistics operators have begun shifting cargo through the northern route regularly, though with higher costs and longer delivery times. Both Ministers agreed that improving predictability and reducing friction on alternative corridors is now critical for trade continuity. A key outcome of the discussion was the proposal to pursue a multi-country "green corridor" arrangement involving Pakistan, China and Central Asian partners to facilitate smoother movement of goods, supported by clear legal and operational mechanisms. The Uzbek side urged coordinated engagement with Chinese authorities to address bottlenecks, and welcomed the idea of leveraging warehousing capacity in Kashgar, including logistics facilities offered for use to support onward movement of cargo. Both sides agreed that diversified routes are essential to strengthen resilience in regional trade. The meeting devoted significant attention to mining and minerals cooperation, where the Federal Minister underscored Pakistan's need for modern exploration capacity, technical surveying, drilling services and technology-driven mining development. Uzbekistan briefed Pakistan on its deep expertise—built over decades—in exploration, laboratories and both open-pit and shaft mining, and shared that a specialized overseas geology and mining services company has been established to provide services outside Uzbekistan. The Uzbek delegation indicated readiness to work with Pakistani partners on exploration services, knowledge transfer, and joint projects, while also engaging with Pakistan's geological institutions. The conversation further expanded to agriculture and value-added exports, including collaboration on livestock and red-meat value chains, rice varieties and cultivation models, and processed foods such as dehydrated fruits, juices and concentrates. The Ministers discussed the importance of compliance, standards, and investment-backed models to enable Pakistan to scale exportable surpluses and tap larger markets in the region.

Concluding the meeting, both Ministers reaffirmed their commitment to deepening Pakistan-Uzbekistan economic ties through accelerated implementation, sustained institutional coordination, and expanded B2B engagement. They agreed to maintain close follow-up across trade facilitation, connectivity, mining cooperation and food security initiatives, with the shared objective of translating strong political goodwill into measurable trade and investment outcomes.

32 police officers punished over jail escapes

ISLAMABAD: Minister of State for Interior Muhammad Talal Badar on Tuesday informed the Senate that 19 prisoners escaped from police custody over the past four years, of whom 15 have since been rearrested. Responding to various questions during Question Hour, he said disciplinary and criminal action was taken against 32 police officers for negligence and violations of standard operating procedures (SOPs). The minister said that four escaped prisoners were still at large, adding that efforts were under way to apprehend them. He said departmental action had been initiated against 32 police officials found responsible for lapses in custody management, with major punishments awarded to 17 officers. He said that 13 criminal cases had also been registered against police personnel whose negligence contributed to the escapes. The minister explained that investigations revealed failures in following SOPs related to the production of accused persons before courts and their transfer from one place to another, which led to the incidents. "Wherever negligence was established, strict action was taken without discrimination," he added. APP

China-Pakistan agri-ties deepened as multiple MoUs inked

DNA

ISLAMABAD: A delegation of Chinese agricultural experts and industry leaders recently concluded a visit to the University of Agriculture Faisalabad (UAF), with the signing of several Memorandums of Understanding (MOUs). It paved the way for enhanced technological collaboration and market integration between the two nations, according to China Economic Net (CEN). The visit, hosted by the Confucius Institute at UAF (CI-UAF), brought together a comprehensive cross-section of China's agricultural innovation sector. The delegation comprised 12 senior executives from leading Chinese agribusinesses, alongside a prominent professor from Northwest A&F University (NWAU) and representatives of the Silk-Road Biohealth Agricultural Industry Alliance. Visiting entities showcased expertise spanning the entire agricultural value chain, including the sesame and chilli industries, smart hen breeding technology, fruit tree cultivation and processing, advanced agricultural machinery, rapeseed improvement and vegetable seed breeding. The delegation held substantive talks with Prof. Dr. Zulfiqar Ali, Vice Chancellor of UAF, and Dr. Saddam Hussain, Local Dean of CI-UAF. Discussions focused on strengthening bilateral cooperation and, crucially, on accelerating the translation of academic research into practical, market-driven solutions to meet Pakistan's specific agricultural development needs.

Facilitated by CI-UAF, the core of the visit involved targeted B2B matchmaking sessions. Chinese delegates engaged in face-to-face meetings with over ten major Pakistani companies from sectors such as poultry, fruit processing, fertilizer and precision agriculture. These interactions have yielded concrete outcomes, culminating in the signing of multiple cooperation agreements and frameworks, CEN's report added. The newly signed MOUs cover a broad spectrum of collaboration areas, including technology transfer, joint skills development programmes and resource sharing, marking a significant step from dialogue to actionable partnerships. Outside the boardroom, the delegation toured the UAF exhibition center and key laboratories to gain a firsthand insight into local research capabilities and potential integration points for Chinese technologies.

HEC announces national skill competency test

The Test will be computer based to be conducted simultaneously across Pakistan on April 4-5, 2026. Eligible candidates may contact focal person of their respective university for timely completion of their registration

ISLAMABAD, February 2, 2026 – The Higher Education Commission (HEC) of Pakistan has notified the commencement of the National Skill Competency Test for IT graduates, a landmark initiative designed to align academic outcomes with the rapidly evolving demands of the global technology sector. Developed pursuant to Prime Minister's directives and in close collaboration with the Ministry of Information Technology & Telecommunication (MoITT), the Pakistan Software Export Board (PSEB), and the Pakistan

Software Houses Association (P@SHA), this standardized assessment aims to enhance the employability and market readiness of the nation's burgeoning IT workforce. For students currently enrolled in their 7th and 8th semesters of computing programs - including Computer Science, Software Engineering, Artificial Intelligence, Data Science and related fields - the test offers a transformative opportunity. Participation is entirely free of charge and provides high-achieving students with a joint certificate from HEC, PSEB, and P@SHA, alongside inclusion in a national talent pool accessible to both local and international employers. Furthermore, qualifying students will receive one academic credit from their respective institutions and gain prioritized access to internships, apprenticeships, and international certification pathways. The significance of this initiative extends deeply into the academic landscape. Higher Education Institutions (HEIs) have been asked to ensure full student participation, as the results will form a critical component of national benchmarking. Universities will be categorized into performance tiers based on their students' success, reflecting their alignment with industry competencies. Conversely, institutions that fail to facilitate the registration process or nominate a focal person by the February 6, 2026, deadline face placement below the lowest performance category in national rankings. The Test will be computer based to be conducted simultaneously across Pakistan on April 4-5, 2026. Eligible candidates may contact focal person of their respective university for timely completion of their registration.—APP

Rubio and American diplomacy

DALIA AL-AQIDI

FOR much of the past decade, American foreign policy has felt confused, cautious and often reactive. Allies were unsure where the US stood. Adversaries tested limits. Too often, decisions seemed driven by short-term political pressures rather than a clear long-term strategy, creating a vacuum in global leadership. In that space, rivals like China, Russia and Iran moved more aggressively to expand their influence, while partners in Europe and the Middle East began questioning whether Washington was still willing and able to lead. In this context, a strong argument can be made that Marco Rubio is emerging as one of the most effective secretaries of state in modern American history. Not because of dramatic gestures or media attention but because he has brought back something essential to US diplomacy: strategic seriousness. Rubio understands a basic truth that many policymakers lost sight of: foreign policy is not about being liked. It is about power, security and responsibility. The purpose of American diplomacy is not to seek applause but to defend national interests, stand with allies and stop threats before they turn into conflicts.

The world Rubio faces is more dangerous than at any time since the end of the Cold War. China is expanding its economic and military reach across Asia, Africa and Latin America. Russia continues to challenge the global order through aggression and coercion. Iran fuels instability across the Middle East through proxy militias and ideological warfare. At the same time, international institutions are weaker, global trust is lower and conflicts spread faster than before. It is about honesty. Rubio understands that diplomacy built on false assumptions leads to failed policies. The Florida politician, who has spent more than half his life in public service, does not rely on wishful thinking to confront global challenges. His approach is grounded in realism: that power cannot be ignored, threats must be faced directly and lasting peace is built through strength and clear-eyed judgment, not comforting illusions.

One of Rubio's most notable qualities is clarity. He speaks about authoritarian regimes without hiding behind vague diplomatic language. He calls out Beijing's strategic ambitions, not as competition but as a long-term challenge to democratic systems. He treats Tehran not as a misunderstood actor but as a revolutionary regime that uses violence, ideology and intimidation to expand its influence. He recognizes that Moscow is not simply reacting to Western policy but actively seeking to weaken the rules-based international order. This clarity is not about confrontation for its own sake. It is about honesty. Rubio understands that diplomacy built on false assumptions leads to failed policies. You cannot negotiate effectively if you refuse to admit what you are negotiating against. At the same time, the American official has shown that strength does not mean recklessness. He does not seek endless wars or military escalation. Instead, he focuses on prevention: making clear that aggression will be costly, while keeping diplomatic channels open for serious negotiation. This balance, firmness without chaos, is one of the most difficult skills in foreign policy and one of the most valuable. Rubio also restores moral clarity to American diplomacy. For years, the US hesitated to speak firmly about its values. Human rights were applied unevenly and democracy often sounded more like a talking point than a real commitment. Rubio brings the focus back to a simple belief: that freedom, the rule of law and human dignity are not special privileges for the West but fundamental rights people everywhere want and deserve. This matters deeply for international audiences. When the US speaks with moral uncertainty, authoritarian regimes fill the vacuum with their own narratives. When America is clear about what it stands for, it gives courage to reformers, dissidents, journalists and civil society actors across the world. Rubio's support for democratic allies is not symbolic. He understands that alliances are not acts of charity; they are strategic assets. He treats partners in Europe, Asia and the Middle East as force multipliers that strengthen global stability. Whether in supporting NATO, strengthening ties with Indo-Pacific democracies or reinforcing partnerships in the Middle East, he has made it clear that the US does not lead alone, but it must still lead. To understand Rubio's place in history, it helps to compare him with some of the most respected Republican secretaries of state.

George Shultz, who served under Ronald Reagan, believed that effective diplomacy must be built on strength. In the Cold War, he pushed back firmly against the Soviet Union while still maintaining open lines of communication. His calm and consistent leadership helped shift the world from constant tension toward meaningful arms control and stability. He treats partners in Europe, Asia and the Middle East as force multipliers that strengthen global stability. James Baker, under President George H.W. Bush, managed the end of the Cold War with rare skill. He built international coalitions, maintained alliances and navigated the collapse of the Soviet system without triumphalism or chaos. His diplomacy was pragmatic, disciplined and effective. Henry Kissinger, though controversial, changed global diplomacy by accepting how power really works. He believed that ideals mean little without a clear strategy and that American interests must stay at the center of foreign policy choices. What Rubio shares with these figures is not their personality or era but their seriousness. Like them, he treats foreign policy as a discipline, not a performance.

However, Rubio's main weakness, according to critics, is that his strong moral view of global politics can limit the flexibility of diplomacy. In many parts of the world, especially in the Middle East, Africa and parts of Asia, Washington must often work with imperfect partners to prevent larger crises. Rubio's preference for firm language, sanctions and public pressure, while powerful tools, can at times narrow diplomatic options and harden positions. Critics argue that an overreliance on pressure risks pushing hostile regimes closer to rivals like China and Russia and closing channels that could be useful for de-escalation. In simple terms, Rubio is excellent at drawing clear lines but real diplomacy often takes place in the gray areas, where patience, compromise and discreet engagement are also necessary. The international community does not need a perfect America but it does need a clear and steady one. When US policy is uncertain, global instability grows. When it is grounded, consistent and guided by principles, nations can plan ahead, work together and manage conflicts with greater confidence.

The Quiet Crisis behind the Gaza War

Dr. Muhammad Akram Zaheer

The result is a West Bank increasingly fragmented into disconnected enclaves.

Palestinian towns are encircled by checkpoints, fences and settler-only roads. Land once used for agriculture is reclassified for security purposes or settlement growth. Permits are required to build, dig wells, or even repair homes, while unauthorised settler construction often proceeds with retroactive approval.

This uneven application of law reinforces a system in which two populations live under different legal regimes on the same land. The human cost is mounting. Palestinian fatalities in the West Bank have reached levels not seen in years

WHILE the world's cameras remain trained on the devastation in Gaza, a slower, less visible crisis has been unfolding across the occupied West Bank. Away from the headlines, tensions have risen sharply, violence has intensified and the political ground has shifted in ways that may prove just as consequential for the future of Palestine and Israel. Roadblocks multiply, armed raids have become routine, settler activity is expanding and Palestinian communities face growing insecurity. The war in Gaza may dominate international diplomacy, but the West Bank is quietly being reshaped. Recent statements from President Donald Trump rejecting any formal annexation of the West Bank have offered a measure of diplomatic reassurance. They echo unusually blunt warnings from Washington's Gulf partners, including the United Arab Emirates, which has reminded Israel that official annexation would cross a "red line." These messages, at least on paper, suggest that the prospect of Israel declaring sovereignty over West Bank territory still carries political costs. Yet focusing solely on formal annexation risks missing the more important reality: the steady advance of de facto annexation, pursued through facts on the ground rather than declarations from parliament.

For years, Israeli settlement expansion has altered the geography of the West Bank. What is different now is the pace and the political environment. Since the outbreak of the Gaza war, settler activity has accelerated, new outposts have appeared and long-stalled plans for construction have moved forward with renewed urgency. Palestinian villages report a sharp rise in settler violence, often accompanied by restrictions on movement that leave communities isolated from farmland, markets and medical care. The Israeli military presence, already pervasive, has deepened, with near-daily raids into urban centres such as Jenin, Nablus and Tulkarem. These developments are not occurring in a vacuum. Israeli politics has shifted decisively to the right, empowering figures who openly oppose the creation of a Palestinian state and advocate permanent Israeli control over the West Bank. Within this political climate, de facto annexation is not a hidden project; it is a stated ambition. By expanding settlements, legalising outposts, rerouting roads and extending Israeli administrative authority over large swathes of territory, successive governments have worked to entrench a one-state reality, even as the language of a two-state solution lingers in diplomatic communiqués. The result is a West Bank increasingly fragmented into disconnected enclaves. Palestinian towns are encircled by checkpoints, fences and settler-only roads. Land once used for agriculture is reclassified for security purposes or settlement growth. Permits are required to build, dig wells, or even repair homes, while unauthorised settler construction often proceeds with retroactive approval. This uneven application of law reinforces a system in which two populations live under different legal regimes on the same land. The human cost is mounting. Palestinian fatalities in the West Bank have reached levels not seen in years. Armed confrontations between Israeli forces and Palestinian groups have intensified, particularly in refugee camps that have become centres of resistance. Civilian life has been deeply disrupted: universities face repeated closures, commerce is stifled by movement restrictions and unemployment continues to rise. For many young Palestinians, the political horizon appears barren, offering neither a credible peace process nor the prospect of genuine self-rule. Against this backdrop, Washington's rejection of formal annexation, though diplomatically significant, offers little immediate relief. The distinction between formal and de facto annexation may carry legal weight, but on the ground it is increasingly blurred. When land is steadily absorbed into the settlement enterprise, when Palestinian presence is constrained and when Israeli civil institutions extend their reach into occupied territory, sovereignty is exercised in practice if not in name. The warnings from Gulf states underline a broader regional concern. Since the signing of the Abraham Accords, countries such as the UAE have invested political capital in engagement with Israel, often presenting normalisation as a pathway to stability and moderation. Formal annexation would place those governments in an untenable position, forcing them to choose between strategic partnerships and domestic public opinion that remains deeply sympathetic to the Palestinian cause. Their "red line" reflects not only diplomatic principle but political necessity. Yet the credibility of these warnings depends on whether they are matched by sustained pressure. Thus far, regional diplomacy has struggled to keep the West Bank high on the agenda. Gaza's catastrophe understandably commands attention, absorbing the energies of mediators and humanitarian agencies alike. But this focus has also created space for quieter shifts elsewhere. In Washington, political divisions and electoral calculations have narrowed the room for assertive engagement. The result is a policy environment in which strong words coexist with limited leverage. Europe, too, has issued repeated statements of concern while largely failing to alter Israeli calculations. The language of international law is invoked, but consequences are rarely attached. Meanwhile, Palestinian leadership in the West Bank remains weak and divided, its authority eroded by years of stalled negotiations, internal rifts and public disillusionment. This vacuum has allowed local armed groups to gain influence, further militarising the landscape and complicating any future diplomatic effort.

The danger is that the West Bank is drifting toward a point of irreversibility. Every new settlement neighbourhood, every bypass road and every legal change that integrates territory into Israel's administrative system makes the partition of land more difficult to imagine. The map is being redrawn not by conference tables but by bulldozers and security orders. Over time, this process erodes not only the physical basis of a Palestinian state but the political logic underpinning decades of diplomacy. For Pakistan and much of the Muslim world, the West Bank's deterioration resonates deeply. The Palestinian question has long been central to public consciousness, framed not only as a territorial dispute but as a test of international justice. As Gaza bleeds, the slow tightening of control over the West Bank risks being overshadowed, yet it may prove equally decisive. A future in which Palestinians are permanently confined to fragmented enclaves under external authority would entrench a system of unequal rights that few could credibly defend.

There is still space, however limited, for a different course. International actors who oppose formal annexation must confront de facto annexation with equal seriousness. This means moving beyond ritual statements to policies that impose tangible costs on actions that undermine the possibility of a negotiated settlement. It also means revitalising diplomatic engagement with the Palestinian leadership and addressing the governance crisis that has weakened its standing. Equally important is the need to restore the West Bank to the centre of international concern. Humanitarian access, protection of civilians and accountability for violence—whether by settlers or security forces—cannot remain peripheral issues. The longer the current trajectory continues unchecked, the more likely it is that the West Bank will become not merely another front of instability, but the graveyard of any remaining hope for a just and lasting peace. History suggests that conflicts ignored rarely resolve themselves. They harden, deepen and eventually erupt in forms that command attention at far greater cost. The world's gaze may be fixed on Gaza today, but the future of Palestine is being quietly contested in the hills and valleys of the West Bank. Whether through indifference or intent, a new reality is taking shape. The question is whether the international community will recognise it in time to change its course.

No Permanent Friends

POSITIVE thinking and optimism are among the noblest ways to approach life, for they inspire resilience and hope. Yet optimism, when detached from ground realities, can become a dangerous illusion. Nations, like individuals, suffer when emotions replace judgment and wishful thinking substitutes for strategy. In this context, certain memories frequently return to my mind—memories shaped not merely by personal observation but by Pakistan's long and often painful engagement with global power politics.

When the renowned American intellectual and analyst Noam Chomsky visited Pakistan, he was asked a question that has troubled this country since its earliest years; how should Pakistan understand its relationship with the United States? Chomsky responded with disarming honesty. America, he said, has always pursued its own interests, irrespective of who sits in the White House. Where its interests lie, it cooperates generously; where they do not, it withdraws without hesitation. To support his argument, he recalled several historical examples and, with a touch of sarcasm, remarked that the much-promised "Enterprise" fleet sent to "help" Pakistan had yet to arrive. Smiling, he added that Pakistanis are an emotional nation; say a few affectionate words to them and they become elated, a vulnerability that has led to repeated betrayals. I was present on that occasion and was struck by the frankness with which an American described American policy. It was unsettling because it rang true. We are, indeed, a deeply emotional people. If a foreign leader laughs with our rulers or speaks to them in an unusually warm tone, we are quick to imagine a relationship of kinship, as though he were a close relative rather than the head of a powerful state guided by hard interests. Sentiment often clouds our judgment, and we mistake courtesy for commitment. History, faith, and experience all counsel caution.

The Qur'an clearly warns that Jews and Christians will not be friends in the sense of guardianship or unconditional loyalty. Yet the Holy Prophet (peace be upon him) entered into diplomatic and necessary agreements with them on the basis of equality and mutual obligation. He safeguarded the interests of the Muslim community, dealt with others fairly, but did not harbour illusions about their intentions. This balance between realism and principle offers a timeless lesson for statecraft: cooperation without naïveté, engagement without surrender. Recent history provides painful confirmation. When the United States abruptly withdrew from Afghanistan, it did so with little regard for the consequences borne by neighbouring states, particularly Pakistan. Vast quantities of advanced military equipment—arms, night-vision devices, sophisticated communication tools, and heavy weaponry—were left behind. Instead of stabilising the region, these weapons seeped into the black market, empowering militant groups and criminal networks. Pakistan, already struggling with internal security challenges, has paid a heavy price. Cross-border terrorism intensified, arms flowed freely into volatile areas, and hard-won gains against extremism were undermined. Once again, America exited when its interests shifted, leaving others to manage the fallout. This behaviour echoed an earlier episode, candidly acknowledged years later by former US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton. She admitted that after the Soviet Union withdrew its forces from Afghanistan, the United States simply walked away, abandoning the region and Pakistan alike. Having used Pakistan as a frontline ally, Washington disengaged without assisting in reconstruction or stabilisation. The resulting vacuum plunged Afghanistan into chaos, nurtured extremism, and eventually produced consequences that haunted the entire world. Clinton conceded that this abandonment was a grave mistake—an admission that confirmed what Pakistan had long experienced: partnerships are often transactional, not enduring. Contemporary American politics further illustrates this pattern. The current US President is known for rapid shifts in tone and policy. Statements made during the day are frequently contradicted by actions taken at night. Policies toward China, Iran, and other countries oscillate according to immediate calculations. Not long ago, he appeared visibly displeased with the Indian Prime Minister; yet when strategic interests aligned, displeasure melted into public warmth. In international affairs, affection is rarely personal; it is dictated by advantage.

The events of May 2025 stand as a sobering reminder. At that critical juncture, divine help was with us and our military leadership remained vigilant. By the grace of Almighty Allah, Pakistan emerged successful. Had circumstances been otherwise, it is unlikely that today's diplomatic posture toward Pakistan would be what it is. International respect follows strength and preparedness, not expectations or appeals. The lesson is unmistakable. Pakistan must place Pakistan first. Relations between states inevitably fluctuate, shaped by interests rather than emotions. There is nothing immoral in this; it is the essence of global politics. What matters is that Pakistan safeguard its dignity, sovereignty, and integrity while engaging others on equal terms. Above all, Pakistan should avoid the urge to put all its eggs in one basket. Overdependence on any single power has repeatedly constrained our options and weakened our negotiating position. A diversified foreign policy, rooted in realism and national consensus, is not a luxury but a necessity. Nations are ultimately remembered not for their hopes or sentiments, but for the decisions they make—and those decisions determine the path of their future.

Attaullah Tarar said building a credible counter-narrative against violent extremism was primarily the responsibility of religious scholars, adding that the government had also established a CVE Cell in the Information Ministry. He said a third-party audit mechanism had been put in place to assess the reach and impact of the narratives produced by the CVE Cell, particularly through digital platforms. The minister informed the House that a fully functional digital communication department was disseminating the counter-extremism narrative nationwide. Referring to recent political engagement, he said the visit of the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa chief minister to the Prime Minister was a positive development and would help improve coordination between the federal government and KP, especially on law and order and counter-terrorism.

Winning not enough for Thailand's most popular party

BANGKOK: Thousands of young orange-clad supporters cheered the rallies of Thailand's most popular political party ahead of elections this weekend, but few expect it to take power. While the People's Party is far ahead in the polls, promising to tackle corruption and reform Thailand's strict royal insult laws, even some of the party's lawmakers have their doubts. "They will not let us become the government or come into power easily," 31-year-old firebrand Rukchanok Srinork told AFP. "It is not a surprise that they will do everything to block us." Dubbed "Ice Storm" by Thai media, Rukchanok is an inspirational figure for many young Thai voters who want to see change. The People's Party is the latest incarnation of the organisation that won the last election, in 2023, pledging to relax lese-majeste laws, push back military influence and break up powerful business monopolies. It struck a coalition deal with second-placed Pheu

Thai - the grouping of ex-prime minister Thaksin Shinawatra, now in prison - only for military-appointed senators to reject its leader, Pita Limjaroenrat, as prime minister. The constitutional court later banned Pita from politics for 10 years for campaigning to change the lese-majeste legislation, known as Section 112, and dissolved the party. Refounded and renamed, the People's Party was around 11 percent ahead of its nearest rival, the ruling Bhujajitai, in the last survey by respected pollster NIDA before a pre-election cut-off. Half of 18- to 35-year-olds support the party, it found. The party has half a million TikTok followers, its bright and playful daily content far outpacing Bhujajitai's 38,000. "I feel bored with the old style of politics," said Napat Sinakasa, a 23-year-old software developer and second-time voter. "I wish new politicians who've never had the chance to run the country have the chance to." But elite and conservative forces retain their grip on the Thai establishment, and most analysts doubt the People's Party will manage to form a government, even if it emerges with the most seats. The party's victory in May 2023 - when it was known as Move Forward - came on a record turnout of 75 percent. Its dissolution sparked months of youth-led demonstrations in Bangkok, with protesters hurling unprecedented public criticisms of the monarchy and demanding transparency and reform. Protest leaders were later convicted under Section 112. Analysts expect incumbent Prime Minister Anutin Charnvirakul's Bhujajitai to come second this time and form a coalition with probable third-placed Pheu Thai. Many young voters say that would disappoint them. "I would probably be angry... not angry at the party, but angry at the rules or the people who caused it - those who might have made secret deals behind the scenes," said Patcharee Phadungsuksira, 26. - APP

Italian biathlete Passler suspended

ROME: Italian biathlete Rebecca Passler has failed a doping test and was on Monday provisionally suspended from competing at the Milan-Cortina Winter Olympics. The 24-year-old's sample showed the presence of letrozole, a drug used to treat breast cancer, the Italian anti-doping agency (NADO Italia) said in a statement. It was detected in an out-of-competition test which fell outside the official Games testing window. Passler currently stands 33rd in the overall World Cup standings. The niece of Johann Passler, an Olympic bronze medalist at the 1988 Calgary Games, she would have been competing in her hometown of Anterselva at the Milan-Cortina Games. The Winter Olympics opening ceremony takes place on Friday.

Trump says Mexico will 'cease' sending oil to Cuba

WASHINGTON: US President Donald Trump said Monday that Mexico would stop sending oil to Cuba, which is already struggling after supplies from its traditional provider Venezuela dried up following the fall of Nicolas Maduro. "It's a failed nation. Mexico is going to cease sending them oil," Trump told reporters in the Oval Office when asked about Cuba. For years, until Maduro's ouster, the Cuban economy spluttered along on cheap supplies of Venezuelan oil. The end of Mexican supplies, too, would significantly deepen what is already Cuba's most serious economic crisis since the 1991 collapse of the Soviet Union. There was no immediate response from Mexico to Trump's comments. The US president has approved punitive tariffs against countries supplying oil to Cuba. The decree effectively forced Cuba's partners to choose between trade with the world's largest economy or with an impoverished island of 11 million people. Mexico has been reluctant to cut supplies, with President Claudia Sheinbaum warning of a "far-reaching humanitarian crisis directly affecting hospitals, food supplies, and other basic services for the Cuban people." But the United States is Mexico's largest trade partner, and tariffs could damage the already slow-growing economy. While reiterating her "everlasting solidarity" with the Cuban people, Sheinbaum added, "We don't want to put our country at risk in terms of tariffs." She also said that during a phone conversation Thursday with Trump, the two leaders "never discussed" the issue of oil with Cuba. In his Oval Office remarks, Trump again said his administration was in talks with Cuba's leaders. "I think we are pretty close, but we are dealing with the Cuban leaders right now," he said, without elaborating. A senior Cuban diplomat on Monday said there were contacts between the two countries, but no formal talks. - Agencies

At UN, Pakistan emphasized need for social solidarity

UNITED NATIONS: Pakistan has highly praised 'Darulaceze', a comprehensive social care institution in Istanbul, Türkiye, saying that since 1895, it has demonstrated that long-term care systems are strongest when they unite state responsibility with philanthropy, volunteerism and community ownership. "Darulaceze stands as a powerful testament to how compassion, when anchored in social solidarity and public trust, can be transformed into a lasting mission," Ambassador Asim Iftikhar Ahmad, permanent representative of Pakistan to the United Nations, told a side-event on the sidelines of the 64th Session of the UN Commission for Social Development. The event was jointly organized by Türkiye, Pakistan, Qatar, and Azerbaijan. It was titled - "Building an Inclusive Long-Term Care System Sustained by Social Solidarity: Türkiye's 130-Year-Old Home of Compassion 'Darulaceze' - as an Example of Good Practice." In his remarks, Ambassador Asim Ahmad said that Darulaceze's principles resonate deeply with Pakistan's own social and moral traditions, where solidarity-based care is embedded both in public policy and societal practice. Highlighting Pakistan's government-led initiatives, the Pakistani envoy referred to the Benazir Income Support Programme (BISP) as a cornerstone of the country's social protection framework. He said that financed through the federal budget, BISP provides targeted cash transfers to millions of low-income households—primarily women-headed families—serving as a vital instrument for poverty alleviation, income security, and social inclusion.

"BISP reflects a clear policy choice: that protecting the most vulnerable is a responsibility of the State and a matter of dignity and rights," he stated. Ambassador Asim Ahmad also drew attention to the long-standing role of Pakistan 'Bait-ul-Mal' in supporting the elderly, women, persons with disabilities, orphans, and individuals without family care. He said that services, rendered by it including residential care homes, medical assistance, rehabilitation, and vocational training, are sustained through a blended model, which combines government funding, zakat, charitable endowments, and voluntary contributions. He also drew attention Pakistan's globally recognized tradition of organized philanthropy and volunteerism, citing the Edhi Foundation as a universal symbol of humanitarian service. He said that operating shelters, ambulance services, old-age homes, and emergency response networks largely through public donations and volunteers, the Foundation exemplifies society-driven care. Ambassador Asim Ahmad also noted the growing role of charitable trusts, faith-based organizations, and private-sector corporate social responsibility initiatives in supporting long-term care and community-based social services across Pakistan. He called for greater international support to elevate solidarity-based care models from good practice to global policy, urging the United Nations and international financial institutions to invest in their documentation, financing, and scaling as integral pillars of inclusive social development.

APNS decries DAWN ad ban

DNA

KARACHI: The APNS expressed its grave concern on the complete stoppage of Govt. advertisements to Dawn Media Group stated a press release of the APNS. The Executive Committee of the APNS at its meeting held on February 03, 2026 at Karachi adopted a special resolution wherein it showed its dismay over the complete ban on the Federal, Provincial Govt. ads for last 15 months. The Executive Committee noted that the newspaper founded by Qauid-e-Azam is facing existential survival issue. The APNS was of the considered opinion that the denial of Govt. ads to Daily Dawn is not only unjust but also an attack on freedom of expression. The APNS observed that this action has been taken to force the media group to change its editorial policy. The APNS reiterated that the Govt. advertisements are paid through public exchequer hence should not be used as tool to impact editorial policy of newspapers. The Executive Committee unanimously expressed its solidarity with Dawn Media Group in the hour of financial strangulation. The APNS Executive Committee expressed its concern on consistent indifference of the Federal Govt. to implement the decision of the Prime Minister Mian Muhammad Shahbaz Sharif, announced three years ago to increase the Govt. advertisement rates of newspapers. The delay has not only caused severe financial crunch to newspaper industry but also shows that the instructions of the Prime Minister are not being honored. The members of the Executive Committee observed that PID Islamabad has not paid major portion of dues of member publications released after the new advertising policy of 2020. They requested the PID to expedite the payment of outstanding dues and allocate a fair share in the quantum of advertisements for the print media. They also demanded that the regional PID offices be empowered to suggest media of their regions and authorized the clients to select the media of their choice. The Sindh based members appraised the Executive Committee that the share in quantum of advertisements released by Sindh Govt. has been considerably reduced. Further, the payments of non-budgeted advertisements and outstanding liabilities has not being made. The members unanimously decided that the office bearers should meet the Provincial Minister for Information and apprise him the problems faced by Sindh based publications. The Executive Committee approve the applications for provisional accreditations of M/s. Balance Publicity (Pvt.) Ltd., Lahore and M/s. Red Ocean Communications and PR (Pvt.) Ltd., Lahore. PM's relief package to strengthen export base: Tahir

DNA

ISLAMABAD: The Islamabad Chamber of Commerce and Industry (ICCI) has highly appreciated Prime Minister Muhammad Shehbaz Sharif for rolling out a comprehensive relief package for industries and exporters, describing it as a timely and positive step towards reviving economic activity, restoring investor confidence and strengthening Pakistan's export base. Addressing a well-attended press conference, ICCI President Sardar Tahir Mehmood said that the Prime Minister announced the relief measures, for which the press conference was convened primarily to express gratitude and acknowledgement.

He also lauded the Prime Minister and Chairman Federal Board of Revenue (FBR) for reviewing and restructuring the Islamabad immovable property valuation table in line with the outcomes of extensive discussions held between ICCI leadership and FBR authorities at the FBR headquarters. He stated that this rationalization would help restore market confidence and encourage genuine investment in the real estate sector. The ICCI President highlighted that the relief package includes a Rs. 4.04 per unit reduction in electricity tariffs, lowering of industrial wheeling charges to below Rs. 9, reduction in the Export Refinance Scheme (ERS) rate from 7.5 percent to 4.5 percent, and the issuance of blue passports to leading exporters for two years. He termed these measures a clear reflection of the Prime Minister's commitment to promoting trade, investment and exports, and reiterated ICCI's full support for the government's economic vision. He reaffirmed the Chamber's resolve to continue acting as a bridge between the government and the private sector for ensuring economic stability and national prosperity. Sardar Tahir Mehmood pointed out that excessive taxation and high interest rates are making Pakistan a difficult place to do business, and urged the government to rationalize these factors on an urgent basis. The ICCI President further stressed that bringing Ki-BOR to single digits is essential to reduce the cost of doing business and stimulate long-term investment. He reiterated ICCI's strong demand to declare the real estate sector as an industry, noting that it not only fulfills housing needs but also supports dozens of allied industries. He also proposed the organization of a National Real Estate Conference with participation from all key stakeholders to identify sectoral challenges and facilitate effective policymaking. Speaking on the occasion, Chairman ICCI Founder Group Sheikh Tariq Sadiq welcomed the Prime Minister's relief package but emphasized the need for further measures to enhance industrial competitiveness and sustain economic growth.

China to play constructive role 'in our way' on N. Korea

SEOUL : China will continue to play a constructive role "in our way" for peace and stability on the Korean Peninsula, Beijing's top envoy has said, hoping that the parties involved will take "effective" steps to help resolve the security issues lying at the core of the stalemate. Chinese Ambassador to South Korea Dai Bing made the remarks in an interview with Yonhap News Agency on Monday, as Seoul is pushing to restore inter-Korean ties and help revive the stalled talks between the North and the United States. Pyongyang has so far rejected the olive branch. "Since the launch of the Lee Jae Myung government, South Korea has actively engaged in efforts to ease tensions on the Korean Peninsula and seek contact and dialogue. The Chinese government highly appreciates these efforts," Dai said through an interpreter. China has maintained a stable and consistent policy and position on the Korean Peninsula issues. We will continue to play a constructive role in our way and maintain communication with South Korea," he said. Dai did not elaborate on what he meant by "our way," but his remarks follow last month's summit talks between President Lee Jae Myung and Chinese President Xi Jinping in Beijing. Seoul has repeatedly called for Beijing — North Korea's traditional ally and key economic benefactor — to play an active role in helping bring Pyongyang back to the negotiating table. The nuclear diplomacy between North Korea and the United States collapsed without a deal in Hanoi in 2019. Following his talks with Xi, Lee said in a press availability in Shanghai that he had requested Xi to act as a mediator on North Korea issues and that Xi advised him to "have patience." Lee has also floated the idea of discussing arms control with Pyongyang, saying that prioritizing the denuclearization goal would not help make progress with the North given its growing nuclear and missile capabilities. "The root of the Korean Peninsula issue lies in security," Dai said. "We hope that the relevant parties will focus on the security side and take effective measures accordingly," he said, apparently suggesting that certain security guarantees should be offered to draw the North into talks. Regarding China's steel structures in the overlapping waters of the Yellow Sea, Dai pointed out that "baseless rumors" about the issue have been spread to stir disagreements between Seoul and Beijing, dismissing suspicion that the structures are for military purposes. "Some individuals have spread baseless rumors or exaggerated the facts, with the aim of amplifying differences between China and South Korea," Dai said. "We reaffirm that the so-called maritime structures are a Chinese deep-sea aquaculture facility for salmon farming, not a military installation," he said. Tensions flared up after China built two buoys and a fixed tower between 2018 and 2024 in the Yellow Sea area where their exclusive economic zones (EEZs) overlap. China claimed the two buoys were fish farms and the third fixed structure was a management facility. However, skeptics in Seoul have raised concerns that the structures may be Beijing's "gray zone" tactic to pave the way for military use and territorial expansion. "We recognize that there are overlapping claims between China and South Korea regarding maritime rights and interests that have resulted in certain differences in the fisheries sector," Dai said.—APP

Indonesia becomes first Asian country to ban elephant rides

JAKARTA: Indonesia has banned elephant rides, becoming the first Asian nation to outlaw the popular tourist activity on animal welfare grounds. Indonesia, home to the critically endangered Sumatran elephant and the endangered Borneo elephant, first announced the nationwide ban in December, with authorities gradually monitoring compliance since the start of this year. The move followed widespread calls to ban elephant rides, with many Indonesians now using social media to alert authorities on sites still offering such activities, especially in Bali, the country's most popular holiday island. All of Bali's conservation sites, including Bali Zoo and Mason Elephant Park & Lodge, have officially banned elephant rides by the end of January, according to the Bali Natural Resources Conservation Agency.

"Based on our most recent monitoring, all five of the conservation sites in Bali have complied and are no longer offering elephant rides for visitors," Ratna Hendratmoko, who heads the agency, told Arab News on Tuesday. Elephant rides were a popular tourist attraction in Bali, which last year welcomed nearly 7 million foreign visitors. "There was demand from visitors, tourists, who are enthusiastic and attracted to elephant rides, even if it's just for 10 to 15 minutes. "But maybe for them, it's an opportunity to show off on social media, showing that they're doing something that they think it's cool, something that not many others can do," Hendratmoko said. "I'm thankful to online friends who have been raising their concerns and reminding us to continue our monitoring. We are giving our best to do our job." = Indonesian authorities are urging conservation sites to prioritize animal welfare, offer educational activities for visitors and shift to "innovative and non-exploitative" attractions, such as wildlife observation without direct physical contact. In November, an investigation by the rights group People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals, showed that elephants in Bali are routinely chained and beaten with sharp bull-hooks to force them to obey for tourist rides.—APP

WHO appeals for $1b for world's worst health crises

"This is why today we are appealing to the better sense of countries, and of people, and asking them to invest in a healthier, safer world

GENEVA: The World Health Organization on Tuesday appealed for $1 billion to tackle health crises this year across the world's 36 most severe emergencies, including in Gaza, Sudan, Haiti and the Democratic Republic of Congo. The UN health agency estimated 239 million people would need urgent humanitarian assistance this year and the money would keep essential health services going. WHO health emergencies chief Chikwe Ihekweazu told reporters in Geneva: "A quarter of a billion people are living through humanitarian crises that strip away the most basic protections: safety, shelter and access to health care."

"In these settings, health needs are surging, whether due to injuries, disease outbreaks, malnutrition or untreated chronic diseases," he warned. Yet access to care is shrinking." The agency's emergency request was significantly lower than in recent years, given the global funding crunch for aid operations. Washington, traditionally the UN health agency's biggest donor, has slashed foreign aid spending under President Donald Trump, who on his first day back in office in January 2025 handed the WHO his country's one-year withdrawal notice. Last year, WHO had appealed for $1.5 billion but Ihekweazu said that only $900 million was ultimately made available. Unfortunately, he said, the agency had been "recognizing ... that the appetite for resource mobilization is much smaller than it was in previous years."

"That's one of the reasons that we've calibrated our ask a little bit more toward what is available realistically, understanding the situation around the world, the constraints that many countries have," he said. The WHO said in 2026 it was "hyper-prioritising the highest-impact services and scaling back lower-impact activities to maximize lives saved."

Last year, global funding cuts forced 6,700 health facilities across 22 humanitarian settings to either close or reduce services, "cutting 53 million people off from health care," Ihekweazu said. "Families living on the edge face impossible decisions, such as whether to buy food or medicine," he added, stressing that "people should never have to make these choices."

"This is why today we are appealing to the better sense of countries, and of people, and asking them to invest in a healthier, safer world.—DNA

Spain to ban
social media
for children under 16

DUBAI: Spanish Prime Minister Pedro Sanchez announced on Tuesday that his country will seek to ban children aged under 16 from using social media platforms.

Speaking at the World Government Summit in Dubai, Sanchez outlined a six-point plan he said would help restore the "promised land" it once was.

"Our children are exposed to a space they were never meant to navigate alone," he said.

"A space of addiction, abuse, pornography, manipulation, violence. We will no longer accept that, and we will protect them from the digital Wild West."

The announcement follows a similar ban by Australia last year. French lawmakers also passed a bill last week that would ban those aged under 15 from accessing social platforms. The UK has also announced it is considering new controls.

To enforce the ban, the Spanish government will reportedly seek to order platforms to put in place stringent age verification methods. It also plans to introduce a new bill next week to hold social media executives accountable for illegal and hateful content. Sanchez added that Spain had joined five other European countries that he labelled the "Coalition of the Digitally Willing" to coordinate and enforce cross-border regulation.—APP

cooperation

For his part, Balakrishnan said he believes there remains a critical mass of countries committed to a rules-based world order, multilateralism, the UN charter, free and fair trade, economic integration, and global supply chains.

He called on Germany and the European Union to expand cooperation with Singapore and the wider Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) region, raising the prospect of a future free trade agreement between the EU and ASEAN countries.—APP

Malaysian court acquits French man

ALOR SETAR: A French national facing a possible death penalty in Malaysia on eight drug-related charges was acquitted Tuesday, freeing him after nearly two and a half years in detention. The High Court in the northern city of Alor Setar ruled that prosecutors failed to prove that Tom Felix, 34, had control, custody or possession of the drugs in the case. "The accused is, therefore, released and acquitted," Alor Setar High Court judge Ewawani Farisyta Mohammad said. Felix, in court wearing a white shirt and trousers, his hands cuffed, looked visibly pleased as the judge delivered the decision. The former Veolia executive appeared to have lost a considerable amount of weight since his arrest, his parents said. Jean Luc and Sylvie Felix were seen embracing after the ruling. Felix and his Malaysian business partner were detained in 2023 after police discovered 1.86 kilograms of cannabis in the common area of a home they shared. Authorities later said Felix was also found in possession of 11.7 grams of the drug. — Agencies

Trump urges 'no changes' to bill to end shutdown

WASHINGTON: US President Donald Trump urged the House of Representatives on Monday to swiftly adopt a spending bill and end the three-day government shutdown. "I hope all Republicans and Democrats will join me in supporting this Bill, and send it to my desk WITHOUT DELAY," Trump said in a post on Truth Social. The shutdown followed a breakdown in negotiations because of Democratic anger over the killing of two protesters in Minneapolis by federal immigration agents, which derailed talks over new money for the Department of Homeland Security (DHS). Late Friday, the Senate passed a package clearing five outstanding funding bills to cover most federal agencies through September, along with a two-week stopgap measure to keep DHS operating while lawmakers negotiate immigration enforcement policy. Several conservative Republicans have voiced their disdain for the deal, however, and have threatened to vote against the Senate-backed package on Tuesday. In his Truth Social post, Trump said "there can be NO CHANGES at this time" to the legislation and called for its immediate passage. "We will work together in good faith to address the issues that have been raised, but we cannot have another long, pointless, and destructive Shutdown that will hurt our Country so badly," the Republican president said in a reference to a record 43-day stoppage last summer. — Agencies

Paper mulberry trees cut on PMO orders, CDA tells IHC

"Harmful paper mulberry trees removed, environment-friendly species planted," says authority

DNA

ISLAMABAD: Amid prevailing concerns over a tree-cutting drive in the federal capital, the Capital Development Authority (CDA) on Tuesday told the Islamabad High Court (IHC) that paper mulberry trees in Islamabad were being chopped down on the directives of the Prime Minister's Office (PMO). Submitting its response in a case related to the cutting of trees in Islamabad, the CDA said that changes to the master plan fall under the authority of the federal government and that the plan has been amended several times with official approval. "Under the planning parameters, the CDA is bound to ensure an 8% green area," the authority said, adding that greenery in the federal capital exceeds the required standard. The CDA's tree-cutting drive in the capital has sparked widespread debate in recent days, and has also become a point of contention within the ruling coalition, as several political parties and civil society groups have expressed concern over the removal of trees. The Islamabad district administration had, in January, said the campaign was specifically targeting paper mulberry trees, maintaining that the species was responsible for serious health problems in the city. The CDA, in over a year, has also removed nearly 30,000 paper mulberry trees, including 8,700 allergy-causing trees in the city to mitigate the intensity of pollen allergy. Last month, the IHC suspended the CDA's tree-cutting drive and sought a clause-wise reply and a detailed report from all parties. Addressing issue, Minister of State for Interior Talal Chaudhry has said that only allergy-causing paper mulberry trees were removed and that 60,000 new trees would be planted by end of March, in addition to more than 40,000 mature trees already planted. Meanwhile, in its response to the IHC, the CDA maintained that paper mulberry trees were removed because they cause pollen allergies. "Scientific research has established that paper mulberry triggers asthma and other allergic reactions," the authority said. "Harmful paper mulberry trees have been cut and environmentally friendly trees have been planted," the CDA said, while stressing that the paper mulberry species does not help prevent pollution and instead contributes to the deterioration of the air quality index (AQI).

Indian opposition blasts Modi-led BJP govt over US trade deal announcement
Congress demands full disclosure and parliamentary briefing, questions impact on farmers and industry

DNA

NEW DELHI: The Indian National Congress has come down hard on the Narendra Modi-led Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) government following US President Donald Trump's announcement of a trade deal with India, urging New Delhi to disclose full details of the agreement to parliament and the nation. "Just like the ceasefire, the announcement of the trade deal was also made by US President Trump. It has been stated that the trade deal is being done 'on Modi's request'," the Congress said in a post on X, formerly Twitter, on Tuesday. The remarks came a day after Trump announced a "trade deal" with India that slashes US tariffs on Indian goods to 18% from 25% in exchange for New Delhi lowering trade barriers, stopping its purchases of Russian oil and buying oil instead from the US and potentially Venezuela. "India appears ready to completely open its market to America," the Congress said on the deal — announced by Trump and said to be done at Modi's request, warning that such terms "will impact Indian industry, traders and farmers". The party raised concerns over language in Trump's announcement, pointing to the potential opening of India's agriculture sector to American goods, and asked what safeguards had been put in place to protect Indian farmers' interests. "There is talk of opening the agriculture sector for America in the statement as well. What exactly is the deal? How have the security and interests of our farmers been ensured?" the statement said. The party also challenged claims that the agreement would require India to stop buying Russian oil. "It has also been said that the Modi government will not buy oil from Russia, but will buy from America and Venezuela instead. Has the Modi government agreed to this condition?" the party asked. It also further questioned the commitment to import more American goods, while seemingly undermining the "Make in India" initiative, and demanded a clear explanation of how this aligns with domestic industrial policy. "India has the right to know the details of this trade deal," the Congress statement said. "The Modi government must take Parliament and the entire country into confidence and share all the details."

Sanaullah, speaking to a local news channel warned that enemies from Afghanistan and India will find no safe haven in Balochistan and KP. He said Pakistan is taking the international community on board, raising awareness about hidden tactics of adversaries, and exposing their actions to the world. He praised the meeting between PM Shehbaz Sharif and KP CM Sohail Afridi as positive and fruitful, highlighting the unity of all political leadership and their collective stance with the armed forces against terrorism, stressing that this united front ensures the protection of the nation and its people. They discussed key issues concerning the country, including maintaining peace and rooting out terrorism, prioritizing national security over politics, he added. Responding to a query, he explained that India has been involved in funding and training terrorists, highlighting the external support that fuels destabilizing activities in the region. He warned that no one will be allowed to destabilize Pakistan, stating that this treatment will continue and the armed forces will deal with them firmly until they fully accept Pakistan's constitution. He further said that regarding Afghanistan, Pakistan is in contact with friendly countries and is engaging in discussions backed by solid evidence. He made it clear that Pakistan will not engage in any table talks with terrorists; they will face consequences only, as the nation stands fully united to defend the country at all costs.

Russia resumes strikes on freezing Ukrainian capital

KYIV: Russia resumed strikes on Kyiv on Tuesday, Ukrainian officials said, as a brief truce announced by US President Donald Trump gave way to renewed attacks in freezing conditions. Trump said on Thursday that Russian President Vladimir Putin had agreed to stop striking Kyiv and "various towns" during cold weather. The Kremlin said the truce would last until Sunday but did not link it to the subzero temperatures. Ukraine said Moscow had kept up its strikes anyway. Russia hit Kyiv "in the bitter cold with another massive strike" overnight, Tymur Tkachenko, the head of the city's military administration, said Tuesday on Telegram. The emergency services said in a later post that three people in Kyiv had been wounded. In the eastern city of Kharkiv, two people were wounded by Russian shelling, regional military chief Oleg Syneubov said. The hours-long attack targeted energy infrastructure and aimed to "cause maximum destruction... and leave the city without heat during severe frost", Syneubov wrote on Telegram. Authorities had to cut heating to more than 800 homes to prevent the wider network from freezing, he said, urging people to go to round-the-clock "invincibility points" around the city if they needed to warm up. Overnight temperatures plunged to minus 17C in Kyiv and sank as low as minus 23C in Kharkiv. — APP
